WASHINGTON, Thursday, March 11.

Washington, politically considered, was to all appearances quiet and tranquil this morning. Cabinet-making was not much indulged in, but there was, nevertheless, an itching desire everywhere perceptible as to the probable nominees. Prophecies on the subject, coming from what source they may, were suspected and received with distrust. The experience of the last few days had taught even the most credulous that implicit reliance could not be placed on any one. The word or opinion of a Senator or Representative, a leading politician, a journalist, was little better than a shifting quicksand. There were exceptions, it is true, but they were very few, and those who did know the actual situation maintained a discreet silence, for it was impossible to tell what new complications might arise which would completely alter the complexion of affairs and necessitate an entire change of programme. The office seekers prowled around the city with open ears and mouths and eyes, scanning the political skies for the appearance of new stars, but none appeared above the horizon.

Noon brought with it the meeting of the Senate for legislation, and of the lower branch for wire-pulling and speculation. The life of a Congressman at the present time is about the last one in the world to be desired. In nine cases out of ten they are the mere slaves of their office-seeking constituents, forced to run to the White House and to the new Secretaries, to their fellow-members and to their Senators, to use their influence for this candidate and that. Signing of papers, writing of letters of recommendation, dining and wining, is with them the order of the day and of the night. This fearful pressure it was that rendered an adjournment to next week an absolute necessity. The Capitol was the grand rendezvous for the mob of applicants for office who are here from all quarters and sections. They crowded the galleries, barred the passage-ways of the corridors, filled the Rotunda, gathered in groups in the window niches, congregated in the ante-rooms. No place was too sacred for them to penetrate. They were very patient indeed, considering the circumstances. They had made up their minds that a message from the President would be received about 1 o'clock, and apparently they had also come to the conclusion that until that time it was a mere waste of words and time to guess or to speculate.

The Senate was even duller than usual. There was the usual prayer from the Chaplain—that sanctimonious formality which is daily enacted merely for appearance-sake. Then came the reading of the tedious journal and the equally tedious work of introducing bills and resolutions for the regulation of all sorts of disorders and and for the rectification of all sorts of wrongs. But the President's message, that which all desired, was slow in coming. The most important bill of the session, that one of Mr. SCHENCK'S to strengthen the public credit, was taken up, but it did not more than half rivet the attention of the large audience to whom the public credit and its strength or weakness were matters of indifference, provided they could secure the one end of their existence to get office and keep it. It was debated until about 1 o'clock, when, as the words, "All further business will be suspended to receive a message from the President of the United States" fell from the Vice-President. All eyes were turned to the main entrance of the Chamber and centered on General PORTER, one of the President's Secretaries. With the words of formality, "I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate the following messages in writing, he handed eight envelopes to the Sergeant-at-Arms. They contained the following nominations:

For Secretary of State—Hon. HAMILTON FISH, of New-York.

For Secretary of the Treasury—Hon. GEO. S. BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts.

For Secretary of War—General JOHN A. RAWLINGS, of Illinois.

Hon. ELIHU B. WASHBURNE to be our Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary to France.

FRANK MOORE, of New-York, to be Assistant Secretary of Legation at Paris.

Dr. ALEXANDER R. SHARP to be United States Marshal for the District of Columbia.

CARNAN A. NEWCOMB to be United States Marshal for the Eastern District of Missouri.

General JAMES LONGSTREET, late of the Confederate Army, to be Surveyor of Customs for the port of New-Orleans.

SIDNEY A. STOCKDALE to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the First District of Louisiana, vice STEEDMAN resigned.

EDWARD V. KINGSLEY to be Secretary of Legation at Madrid, vice HORATIO J. PERRY, to be removed.

Chief Engineer JAMES W. KING to be Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering in the Navy Department, vice ISHERWOOD, to be removed.

JAS. F. CASEY to be Collector of Customs at New-Orleans.

MANUAL J. GONZALES to be Chaplain of the Ninth Regiment United States Cavalry, vice JACOBI retired.

The Senate at once confirmed the three members of the Cabinet, and also Mr. WASHBURNE'S nomination. The remainder were referred. The scene on the reception of the nominations was like that of Friday last—anxious Senators, breathless correspondents, nervous operators, and a curious and anxious crowd filled the Chamber and corridors, and anybody fortunate enough to have a list, was unfortunate enough to be compelled to read it a dozen times before he could escape from the throng of expectants.

The nominations were received with a variety of expression. That of Mr. FISH was generally unexpected, and as he has been so long out of public life, his qualities and attainments had almost passed out of mind, but his high character, his ability and his safety as counselor in his important post are fully conceded. His acceptance has not yet been received.

Governor BOUTWELL'S nomination gives great satisfaction in all political and in many, but not all, financial quarters. The confidence of the people in his integrity is so great that there will unquestionably be a hearty response to the appointment from all sections. Governor BOUTWELL has excellent business and administrative capacity, and has a faculty of getting at the truth of matters and the facts of a case with almost unerring certainty.

The nomination of General RAWLINGS as Secretary of War is commended in all quarters. He is one of the ablest officers of the army, though belonging to the civil list, rather than the military. He is cool, discreet, comprehensive, of broad views, keen analysis and quick perception. His feeble health is the only obstacle in the way of his successful administration of the War Department. He will probably resign his commission as Brigadier-General.

THE NEW-ORLEANS APPOINTMENTS.

The New-Orleans appointments are the subject of much discussion. The selection of SIDNEY A. STOCKDALE as Collector of Internal Revenue for the First District of Louisiana gives unanimous satisfaction. He was strongly indorsed by the Chamber of Commerce and by the merchants, as well as by his political friends. This selection illustrates forcibly General GRANT'S knowledge of men. Mr. STOCKDALE first came to his notice as a private in Governor OGLESBY'S regiment of Illinois infantry. He was under his eye from that time until the war closed, serving at last as Provost-Marshal on the General's staff. Thence he went to New-Orleans as Deputy Collector of Customs under Collector (now Senator) KELLOGG. He is a young man of unquestioned ability and integrity, and will give satisfaction, beyond doubt.

The appointment of JAS. F. CASEY as Collector of the Port is not so heartily commended by the Louisiana people here, though his ability, integrity and fitness are fully conceded. He is a brother-in-law of the President, and the propriety of the selection is the only objection seriously urged against him. This must give way, when it is remembered that the President becomes directly responsible for the management of the Custom-house, and there can be no doubt that he means to hold Mr. CASEY to that responsibility. Personally the new Collector is a man of fine presence and address, affable and courteous, and even if judged solely from his appearance, it is evident the President has made no mistake in the man.

The nomination of General LONGSTREET as Surveyor of the Port is received with a diversity of sentiment. Many of the Republicans are pleased with it, and it was indorsed by the New-Orleans Republican editors here. Some of the ex-Union soldiers denounce it in severe terms, but everybody concedes General LONGSTREET'S ability and integrity, and of its salutary and reassuring effect upon the mass of the Southern people there can be no doubt. There will probably be considerable discussion on his confirmation, and much curiosity is manifested to see the effect produced upon the country by this experiment.

The nomination of Dr. ALEX. K. SHARP as United States Marshal for the District of Columbia is one not only fit to be made, but was to have been expected. This officer is a member of the President's official household, and the custom has always been for the President to select some intimate personal friend or relative. Dr. SHARP is at present a Postmaster at Richmond, and is a brother of Mrs. GRANT.

SECRETARY WASHBURNE'S RESIGNATION.

The following correspondence has taken place between the President of the United States and Mr. WASHBURNE:

WASHINGTON, March 10, 1869.

To the President:

When you did me the honor to confer upon me the appointment of Secretary of State, I felt constrained to state to you that my health would prevent me from holding the position for any considerable length of time. I am already admonished that a proper discharge of the duties of the office would involve more labor and responsibility than I am willing to undertake, in justice to the public interest and myself. If convenient and agreeable to you, I would be glad to have you name my successor at as early a moment as you deem practicable, and you will please consider this as my resignation, to take effect as soon as my successor is qualified and ready to enter on the discharge of the duties of the office.

I need not add here, Mr. President, how gratefully I appreciate the distinguished honor you have conferred upon me by inviting me to become one of your constitutional advisers. Had circumstances permitted it, I should have been pleased to have been associated with you officially, and to have aided you as far as in my power in carrying out your views in the administration of the Government upon the principles of honesty, retrenchment, economy, public faith and equal and exact justice to all.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. B. WASHBURNE.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, March 11, 1869.

Hon. E. B. Washburne, Secretary of State:

DEAR SIR: Your resignation of the office of Secretary of State, with reasons for the same, is received. In accepting it I do so with regret that your health will not permit you to continue in the office or some Cabinet position. Our personal relations have been such from the breaking out of the rebellion to the present day, and your support of me individually in the army and its cause such, that no other idea presented itself strongest to my mind, on the first news of my election to the Presidency, than that I should continue to have your advice and assistance. In parting with you, therefore, I do it with assurance of continued confidence in your ability, zeal and friendship, and with the hope that you may soon be relieved from the physical disabilities under which you have labored for the last few years.

Very respectfully your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT.

A GEORGIA DELEGATION AND THE PRESIDENT.

A delegation of the members of the Georgia Legislature, headed by FOSTER BLODGETT, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, and accompanied by J. W. CLIFT, Member of Congress; Colonel HOPKINS, Colonel PRINCE, and Messrs. H. M. TURNER and J. M. SIMMS, two of the lately expelled members of the Georgia Legislature, waited upon the President about 3 o'clock this afternoon to present the resolutions of the Republican State Convention, held on the 5th inst., setting forth their grievances and sufferings, and asking that the Reconstruction acts and the act of admission of June 25, 1868, be literally complied with. The delegation was received in the anteroom by General DENT, and after waiting a short time were presented to the President in his private office. Mr. BLODGETT addressed him upon the subject of their visit. The points presented for consideration of the President are: First, The truthfulness of their grievances, and the reasons therefor; Second, They point out remedies therefor; Third, They earnestly and urgently, but most respectfully, ask Congress and the President to apply the remedy.

After shaking hands with the delegation individually, General GRANT listened to the address of Mr. BLODGETT, and upon its conclusion, said he could not make any reply to what had been said at present. It was a matter he would have to think about and talk over. He wanted to see one thing very much, and that was, all classes of the people protected in their opinions everywhere. He desired to see the speedy establishment of law and order in the South. He said he had seen in the papers that the Legislature of Georgia were to-day going to vote on the Fifteenth Amendment, and inquired how they would dispose of it.

Mr. BLODGETT replied that they would pass it. The Democrats in the Legislature had informed him that this would be the case. Congress having inflicted negro suffrage on them, they were now going to try and inflict it, in turn, on the d—d Yankees.

The President smiled and said that was more than he had expected, and seemed pleased at the prospect of so easy a solution of the vexed question. The interview then terminated.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE DIPLOMATIC CORPS.

The Diplomatic Corps called on the President this afternoon at two o'clock, and were introduced by Mr. WASHBURNE. They were attired in their elegant Court costumes. Baron GEROLT then addressed the President. He said:

MR. PRESIDENT: The representatives of foreign nations accredited to the Government of the United States, have the honor on this occasion to renew the assurances of their sincere wishes for the welfare of your Excellency, and of the nation which has intrusted to you the Executive power of the Government of the United States. In the name of my colleagues, I express the most sincere hopes that the friendly relations now existing between the United States and other nations will be maintained under your Administration. Such, Mr. President, will be the aim of our most earnest and constant endeavors.

The President in response said:

BARON GEROLT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE DIPLOMATIC CORPS: I heartily thank you for the kind expression of your good wishes for my welfare and that of the nation which has chosen me as its Chief Magistrate. You may be assured that it shall be my constant endeavor to maintain those relations of peace and friendship which now exist between the United States and the countries which you respectively represent, a purpose which I am happy to learn from you will be fully reciprocated.

The Diplomatic Corps then withdrew.

SECRETARY BOUTWELL.

Governor BOUTWELL visited the President this evening. He will resign his seat in the House to-morrow; will qualify immediately, and at once enter upon the discharge of his duties.

SECRETARY COX.

Secretary COX received a large number of visitors at the Interior Department this morning.

VISITORS TO THE PRESIDENT.

The crowd of visitors at the Executive Mansion to-day was greater than at any day since the President entered upon the duties of his office. There was a perfect avalanche of cards showered upon General DENT for presentation to the President. Private interviews were granted to a great many of the callers, including among them Senators Cole, Cragin, Kellogg, Sumner, Drake, Schurz, Williams, Sawyer, Stewart, Senator Fowler, of Tennessee, Governor Reed, of Florida, and also many Representatives, among them Messrs. Banks, Hawley, Paine, Darling, and others. Besides these, a vast number of persons were admitted to the President's office before 12 o'clock, the hour for closing the doors to visitors.

THE HOUSE COMMITTEES.

The House Committees are expected to be announced by Speaker BLAINE to-morrow. Among the changes are the following: Mr. DAWES becomes Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; Mr. BINGHAM is transferred from that of Claims to the Chairmanship of the Judiciary; BUTLER is reported to be assigned to DAWES' old place on the Elections, and General PAINE to the Reconstruction Committee. Mr. HOOPER leaves the Ways and Means, and takes the Chairmanship of the Banking and Currency Committee; KELLY, of Pennsylvania, and MCCARTHY, of New-York, both extreme high tariff men, go on the Ways and Means in place of MOORHEAD and GRISWOLD. Mr. SCHOFIELD takes KELLY'S place on Naval Affairs, and Mr. WHEELER, of New-York, will be Chairman of the Pacific Railroad. General GARFIELD takes the second position on Appropriations, and General LOGAN becomes Chairman of Military Affairs.

MR. BINCKLEY BELLIGERENT.

This morning about 8 o'clock, Messrs. JOHN M. BINCKLEY, Ex-Solicitor of the Internal Revenue Department, and Mr. ROLLINS, Ex-Commissioner of Internal Revenue, met at the corner of F and Fourteenth streets, opposite Willard's Hotel. Mr. BINCKLEY threw away his coat and cane and attempted to strike Mr. ROLLINS with his fist. Mr. ROLLINS, not caring to engage in a collision, ran along F-street and up Fifteenth-street toward the Revenue Office. Mr. BINCKLEY pursued him until Mr. ROLLINS had nearly reached the Revenue Office. Mr. BINCKLEY, on his way home after this occurred, met Deputy Commissioner HARLAND on New-York avenue. He accosted him with the inquiry "whether he would fight?" He responded affirmatively, whereupon Mr. BINCKLEY knocked Mr. HARLAND down. Mr. HARLAND was being severely beaten, when a crowd interposed and separated the parties. These meetings were casual. This version comes from friends of Mr. BINCKLEY.

The friends of Ex-Commissioner ROLLINS say that when Ex-Solicitor BINCKLEY accosted that gentleman with attempted violence, Mr. BINCKLEY was told that Mr. ROLLINS, (who sought to avoid a street fight,) that any breach of law would be punished, when ROLLINS passed on, followed by Mr. BINCKLEY a short distance, the latter, however, making no further attempt to assault Mr. ROLLINS. Notwithstanding the rough scuffle between Messrs. BINCKLEY and HARLAND, shortly afterward, the latter was not prevented from attending to the performance of his duties as Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Mr. BINCKLEY gave himself into the charge of an officer, by whom he was escorted to the office of a Justice of the Peace, who held him to an appearance at Court in the sum of $300.

THE TREASURY.

Mr. Stewart's Appointment as Secretary of the Treasury and His Declination—His Munificent Charitable Proposition—A Connected Statement of the Case.

From Our Special Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, March 9, 1869.

To-morrow will settle the affairs of the Treasury, for awhile at least. Before this can reach you, Mr. BOUTWELL will have been nominated and confirmed; and other changes will be made to fill places which have been considered as only temporarily supplied. Meantime I send you a connected history of the nomination, confirmation and withdrawal of Mr. STEWART with some facts not generally known in that connection.

The howl of rage raised by the politicians at the remorseless destruction of all their hopes and the dissolution of their "rings" by the announcement of President GRANT'S Cabinet was a whisper compared to that of the protectionists at the selection of such a prominent free trader as Mr. A. T. STEWART to be Secretary of the Treasury. There never has been a Cabinet since the Government was formed which gave such widespread dissatisfaction to the old and prominent politicians and ancient office-holders as that of President GRANT; there could have been selected no man who would have developed such bitter and active hostility on the part of the protective interests and representatives as Mr. STEWART. They—the old politicians and protectionists—say that STEWART was the only man in the list really known to the country, and that he was, from what they call his notorious free-trade notions, the most obnoxious that could have been chosen. Now they are arguing that if the others whom they do not know are as obnoxious in sentiment as this one who is known, that time will develop equally active hostility to the whole Cabinet of General GRANT'S selection. Mr. STEWART will doubtless retire; the projected transfer of his business interests now talked of will hardly be consummated, less because it is not feasible, as the protectionists now argue, than because it will have to the public eye the appearance of the evasion of a law, which, as it has been enacted, ought to be enforced. The full history of this appointment will then probably be given to the public. At present, owing to the reticence of General GRANT, and the fact that Mr. STEWART has declined positively to see any of the newspaper men, the real facts of the case, and the motives and status of Mr. STEWART are not fully and correctly known. When they are, and feeling on the subject has died out, it will be recognized that General GRANT was wise in his choice of Mr. STEWART, and not unwise in his prompt request for the removal of his disabilities; and the conduct of Mr. STEWART will redound to his credit and add to the public appreciation of his true character.

There is little doubt that Mr. STEWART greatly desired the position; and just as certain that General GRANT wished him in it. It was the former's most earnest and absorbing wish to make national reputation in the same field that ALEXANDER HAMILTON had; and it is known that it has for a long time past been General GRANT'S firm belief that, of all men in the country, Mr. STEWART, a practical financier, largely engaged and experienced in immense manufactures and even greater commerce, already wealthy and beyond the temptation of riches, but eager to add to his reputation as a financier and to establish a name as a statesman, was the one most competent to "smite the rock of the national resources" that "abundant streams of revenue" may gush forth; and to touch "the dead corpse of public credit that it may again spring to its feet." It was a noble ambition and a generous confidence, and it is a great pity that the one cannot be realized and the other proven and sustained.

With this confidence in the practical ability of Mr. STEWART, it seems that General GRANT, from the very first, selected him for the position. There is a statement still flying about the city that Mr. BOUTWELL, now confirmed in it, was originally selected for this position, and that on March 1 he declined it, and Mr. STEWART was selected as the alternative. This is not the case. Mr. BOUTWELL, hearing of this rumor on Saturday last, asked leave of General GRANT to state the facts in the event that inquiry was made of him. He said, as you have already published, that he had declined the Secretaryship of the Interior, but his reasons for so doing have not been given as far as I have seen. I am credibly informed that one of Mr. BOUTWELL'S family, in alluding to the subject on yesterday, stated that the reason he declined was that General GRANT would not consent to the radical changes in the personnel as well as the policy of the Department proposed by Mr. BOUTWELL. Thereupon Mr. BOUTWELL retired. This explodes the story that Mr. BOUTWELL was General GRANT'S first choice as Secretary of the Treasury; and I think I risk nothing in saying that Mr. STEWART was among the earliest men selected for a Cabinet position, and the only one named in connection with the office to which he was nominated. The Treasury Department was not offered even to Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, though his choice of three others, including that now held by Mr. WASHBURNE, was offered to him. I do not know, now that Mr. BOUTWELL goes in, that it is on the conditions which he announced as precedent to his acceptance of the Interior—the permission to make radical changes in the Department personnel. The protectionists claim Mr. BOUTWELL as one of their number, but he does not appear to be radically so. He strongly opposed the repeal of the law of 1789 for other than commercial reasons. Since the development of their strength, the more radical protectionists in the House have talked about making KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means in place of Mr. SCHENCK; but in this they will hardly succeed. He will probably go on the Committee in place of Mr. MOORHEAD, but he can hardly hope to be the Chairman.

The nomination of Mr. STEWART was promptly confirmed without question or doubt on the part of the Senate, although more than two-thirds of that body, when the opposition to the repeal of the law in the House was developed, took strong grounds against its repeal. No one in the Senate suspected the existence of the law, but some of those who voted for the confirmation of Mr. STEWART, forgetting this proof of their ignorance of the law, have been satirically alluding to the first day's work of the "President General" (as BISMARCK addressed him) as a "bungling piece of business." The existence of the law was first made known in the lobby. A few minutes after the public announcement of the Cabinet, the attention of Chief Justice CHASE was called to the existence of the law by Judge COWAN, of New-Jersey, and Senator KELLOGG, of Louisiana, subsequently alluded to the fact that as Collector at New-Orleans he had been compelled to take an oath to the effect that he was not engaged in trade or commerce, and added that he thought the law would apply to Mr. STEWART also. In a few hours the news was all over the city. General DANIEL BUTTERFIELD, straying into the TIMES Bureau in Fourteenth-street, was shown a copy of the law, and taking up the volume of the Revised Statutes, immediately proceeded to Mr. STEWART'S rooms in the Ebbitt House, and showed him the important document which so seriously affected his case. A consultation with Judge HILTON followed, and on his suggestion Chief Justice CHASE was sought, and his advice on the subject was asked. Mr. STEWART soon learned that the law was still in force, extended and strengthened by supplemental acts, and that he must either give up his business, ask Congress to repeal the act, or resign. Naturally Mr. STEWART did not wish to do the last. "I cannot close up my business in five years," was his reply to the first suggestion. As to the other alternative, he intimated that it was, of course, not for him to express such a desire, or ask Congress to remove his disabilities. Mr. STEWART then repaired to the residence of General GRANT. It was then after tea, General GRANT was at leisure, and the subject was discussed. The President voluntarily, without any suggestion whatever from any source, at once said he "would fix that," and wrote out the rough draft of the message which was delivered to the Senate on the morning of March 6, but which singularly enough, was dated March 4, though the nominations did not go in until March 5, and the existence of the law was not made known to the President until after dark the same evening. It is a clerical error, I suppose. However, it is known that President GRANT'S decision in regard to the matter was promptly made in consequence of his desire to retain Mr. STEWART, and that this action was neither suggested nor solicited by Mr. STEWART.

In the meantime the opposition to Mr. STEWART was developing. The fact was loudly and widely asserted that Mr. STEWART was the largest importer in the country; that he paid more custom duties than did the whole City of Baltimore, and more than many others in the country; and the fact that he was also one of the most extensive manufacturers in America was either wholly ignored or violently denied. On Saturday claims of the house of A. T. STEWART & Co. for "drawbacks"—overpaid custom duties—to the amount of about $50,000 had been paid by the Treasurer, and this was quoted as an illustration of the undue and indirect influence which the appointment of Mr. STEWART would have in favor of his mercantile establishment. The fact of the payment was admitted by Judge HILTON, Mr. STEWART'S adviser, but explained by him as one of numerous claims of the house then pending; and it was found that during the past year over one hundred suits against the Government for "drawbacks" had been instituted in the Courts by Messrs. A. T. STEWART & Co. It was asserted by the protectionists that the retention of Mr. STEWART was equivalent to the retention, as Special Commissioner of the Revenue, of Mr. DAVID A. WELLS, who is, in consequence of his late conversion from protection to free trade principles, the most obnoxious man in Washington to the protectionists. All sorts of similar rumors were started,—among others, which proved false, that a delegation of thirty or forty New-York merchants were en route to Washington to protest against Mr. STEWART'S retention,—and by Monday, when it was supposed that Mr. SHERMAN'S bill repealing the various acts would be called up, the protectionists had developed great strength, and the repeal of the acts was discovered to be impossible.

As soon as this fact was known—early on Monday—Mr. STEWART at once waited on President GRANT, and placed his resignation in his hands. This was done at 9 A. M., on the 8th, but the President, anxious to retain Mr. STEWART, declined to act upon it immediately. During the previous day suggestions had been made, and Associate Justice CARTTER and other legal lights had been consulted on the feasibility of carrying out the old project of dividing the Treasury Department, making the collection of the Customs and Revenue a separate and distinct department. It was decided that the remodeling of the various acts, in order to do this, rendered this idea inoperative at this time, and it was finally dropped. Generals BUTTERFIELD and COCHRANE were the originators of the proposition that Mr. STEWART should retire from all business; and by noon of the 8th, Mr. STEWART was engaged in drawing up the deed of trust conveying his profits and interests in his business to Messrs. W. B. ASTOR, JAMES BROWN, and Judge HILTON, as trustees, for any great charity which they might select. He subsequently furnished a written statement of the plan of this gift and the reasons for making it, and this has been sent you by telegraph. On the 9th, the deed of trust and a communication explaining its intent and purpose, was handed to General GRANT; but as you already know that of the two documents the resignation was accepted.

The announcement of his intention to execute this deed reached the leading protectionists late in the evening, and soon spread like wildfire among them. The Pennsylvanians had a consultation, but with what result I am unable to state. The argument was advanced that Mr. STEWART could not legally make over the uncertain interest in a speculative enterprise; and the assertion was made that neither he nor the President could afford to evade a law in the manner proposed. "General GRANT has declared," said a Pennsylvania representative who had fought under him, "that he will execute the laws of the land as he finds them; and I do not believe he will evade any of them in this way." I have been told and have good reason to believe it true that Mr. STEWART, although willingly executing the deed of trust, expressed himself to his advisers as doubtful of its feasibility for the purpose desired. This has already been fully decided to be impractical, and Mr. STEWART has withdrawn from the Cabinet in obedience to the law whose wisdom no one doubts, though it is to be regretted that its enforcement should have at this time deprived the country of the services of a man whose financial ability and commercial character would have added so largely to the strength of the Administration and country in their most vital point of the finances. In all that has been said, favorable and unfavorable, in regard to Mr. STEWART and the proposed repeal of the law, I have been struck with the fact that the opinion that his administration of the Department would have been a magnificent example of great executive ability is universal. Even the protectionists say this, though declaring that it would not have been, with his free-trade notions, a great financial success.

The opponents of the repeal of the law have frequently alluded to the execution of the deed of trust as an effort to secure popular support. They also say that Mr. STEWART has been actuated by a desire to go down to history connected with the Administration of General GRANT, and that he ought to be satisfied with the honor of a nomination and its unanimous confirmation. I do not think Mr. STEWART has at any time had an idea of seeking popular applause by his charity gifts. I do not think he cares for such applause; and, though the reputation of a Peabody which he might have gained in this way, is enviable enough, it is not of the kind to satisfy Mr. STEWART. I cannot imagine Mr. STEWART returning to his business satisfied with the honor of the nomination and confirmation and the holding of the office for a few days; but I can imagine how grateful to a man of his mind and ambition would be the difficult struggle to relieve the financial embarrassments of a great nation, and win reputation as a great statesman. I imagine from a little I have seen of the man in his old place in New-York—the directing power of the most perfectly systematized and successful business in the world—that he would rather grandly fail in a great effort to restore the public credit than to retire thus frustrated by an unforeseen obstacle with the unsatisfactory honor he has already received. As he retires, alas! for his successor! A. T. STEWART, and what he would have done had he been allowed to remain in office, will be continually thrown in his teeth, no matter what he accomplishes.

THE CABINET.

George S. Boutwell, Secretary of the Treasury.

Governor BOUTWELL, who was yesterday nominated and confirmed Secretary of the Treasury, is a native of Massachusetts. He was born in Brookline, Norfolk County, Jan. 28, 1818. His early years were passed on a farm, and it was expected by his parents that he would eventually become a farmer. Circumstances conspired, however, to prevent this, and young BOUTWELL became a merchant's clerk in Groton. He served a thorough apprenticeship to commercial pursuits, and for some time was engaged in business for himself. During twenty years he was moderately successful, at the end of which time he gave up his business and commenced the study of the law, and when admitted to practice at the Bar found himself the junior practitioner among much younger men. Taking a deep interest in political matters, he was elected to the State Legislature in 1842, where he served continuously for seven years. In 1851 he was elected Governor of the State, and in 1853 was a member of the Massachusetts Constitutional Convention. For eleven years he held the responsible position of Secretary to the State Board of Education, and for nearly the same length of time was one of the Overseers of Harvard College. He was a member of the Peace Conference of 1861. In July, 1862, he was appointed Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and was charged with the organization of that department. In 1863 he was elected to Congress, and was immediately assigned to duty upon several of the most important committees in the House, among them the Committee on the Judiciary. He has been reelected successively to each Congress convened since that time.

Mr. BOUTWELL has been generally recognized as one of the ablest men in the House—a fluent, impressive debater and a conscientious worker. His studious habits throughout his long public career enabled him to overcome the lack of early education. He possesses a thoroughly disciplined mind, and a memory which treasures up facts and data, and to an extent that has disordered him one of the most formidable opponents on the floor of the House. He was an earnest supporter of Mr. LINCOLN'S administration, and warmly defended the emancipation proclamation and the enlistment of colored persons during the war. When President JOHNSON was brought to trial, charged with high crimes and misdemeanors, Governor BOUTWELL was selected as one of the impeachment managers, and was one of the most determined of those who insisted upon the conviction and removal of that officer. He was also, at that time, a member of the Committee on Reconstruction, and is responsible, to a great extent, for the reconstruction policy adopted by Congress, as opposed to that of President JOHNSON.

In addition to his public duties Governor BOUTWELL has found time to write several books of value, an l is the author of a Manual of the School System and School Laws of Massachusetts; Educational Topics and Institutions; A Manual of the Revenue System, and a recently published volume of Speeches on Reconstruction.

It is undoubtedly true that President GRANT included Governor BOUTWELL in his original selections for his Cabinet, and that he offered him the position of Secretary of the Interior, which position Governor BOUTWELL declined, preferring his seat in Congress. Mr. STEWART'S declination of the Treasury Department, however, leaving vacant the most important, at this time, bureau of the Government, Governor BOUTWELL has consented to accept the nomination tendered him. His unquestioned integrity, his general ability, and his exceeding familiarity with the revenue system of the country, give a prestige in entering upon the duties of the position which will inspire confidence in our financial integrity both at home and abroad. Mr. BOUTWELL'S personal appearance is very prepossessing. He is of medium height, has black hair and whiskers, and a countenance indicative of an educated gentleman.

Mr. BOUTWELL'S views on financial matters are very well set forth in the following extract from a speech made by him last Fall in the Massachusetts Republican State Convention:

"We do not propose to tolerate, sanction or permit an issue of demand-notes, payable in coin, to be exchanged for the time-bonds of the United States. We intend to limit, and if necessary, to diminish gradually, the volume of paper money until it approximates in value to the standard of coin. We intend that there shall be one currency for the bondholder, the merchant, the farmer, the pensioner, and the laborer. That currency shall be of the value of gold. When this is done, the public debt will be paid as the resources of the country may permit, and to the satisfaction of those who pay and of those who receive. When the credit of the country is restored, as it will be by the single fact of the election of General GRANT, we can issue bonds, payable after ten or twenty years, bearing a lower rate of interest, and thus save annually the sum of twenty or thirty millions of dollars. But, first of all, as a means of restoring the public credit, the people must dispel by their votes the delusion of national dishonesty in the public finances. The Republican Party knows no policy in finance but honesty."

John A. Rawlings, Secretary of War.

President GRANT could have made no selection for the post of Secretary of War which would have been more popular with the army than that of General JOHN A. RAWLINGS, of Illinois. From the first it has been generally conceded that General RAWLINGS would go into the Cabinet, and when General SCHOFIELD'S name was mentioned it was understood that the appointment would not long keep RAWLINGS ont of his proper place.

The new Secretary of War is a very young man—not over forty, though his precise age is not known. He is a native of Illinois and of humble birth. He educated himself, and at an early age adopted the legal profession. He entered on the practice of law in 1859 at Galena, Illinois, and at once rose to considerable local distinction and great popularity. In the Presidential canvass of 1860 he was a candidate for elector on the Douglass ticket, and stumped his Congressional District with great vigor and success, and won great reputation as a popular orator.

Although his party friends at Galena were timid about taking sides at the opening of the war, RAWLINGS early determined on his course. A few nights after the firing on Sumter, a meeting of the citizens of Galena was held, and a prominent Democrat was called to the chair. He had begun to talk about "Republican responsibility for the war" and of "compromises," when E. B. WASHBURNE rebuked him by exclaiming, "Mr. Chairman, any man who will try to stir party prejudices at this time is a traitor." At the same moment RAWLINGS entered the hall, and loud cries called him to the stand. He advanced and made a speech lasting half an hour and ending with these words:

"I have been a Democrat all my life; but this is no longer a question of politics. It is simply country or no country. I have favored every honorable compromise; but the day for compromise is passed. Only one course is left us. We will stand by the flag of our country, and appeal to the god of battles."

A couple of evenings afterward, RAWLINGS and GRANT, who had a slight acquaintance, met at another meeting, and RAWLINGS jestingly proposed to GRANT that they should get up a company.

"As you have seen service you shall be Captain," he said; "and ROWLEY and I will toss up to see which shall be First Lieutenant." The Galena company was raised, but GRANT was not elected Captain, and RAWLINGS got no Lieutenancy. A. L. CHETLAIN was elected Captain. GRANT got employment as a clerk in the Governor's office at Springfield, and RAWLINGS stuck to the law. GRANT was soon made a Colonel, and subsequently a Brigadier-General. His first act was to get a commission as Captain and Assistant Adjutant-General for RAWLINGS, and on Sept. 15, 1861, the latter reported for duty on GRANT'S staff. He has never left it until yesterday, when he was confirmed Secretary of War.

He has served with GRANT in all his campaigns, from Belmont to the Appomattox, and has been his constant and trusted adviser in every plan and negotiation. He was present at all the great surrenders, from Donelson to the finale in Virginia, and, with GRANT, framed the important documents which recorded those achievements. He has been advanced in the army with GRANT, and rose to the highest rank in his grade; as in the case of General GRANT, a new office was created for him, and he was made Chief-of-Staff of the Armies, with the rank of Brigadier-General and brevet of Major-General. No officer, among those who at the close of the war were so rapidly promoted, has reflected greater credit upon his rank and upon the army itself, than this quiet, taciturn and agreeable gentleman and untiringly industrious, clear-headed and practical officer. It will be the misfortune of the army if his appointment to the Secretaryship of War necessitates the resignation of his military office.

General RAWLINGS has not been in good health for many months past—not, indeed, since the close of the war, and lately had to make a trip for his health to the northern climates. He returned in somewhat improved condition about the middle of February, and it is hoped that he will be able to attend to the duties of his office without further danger to his health.

Hon. Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State.

Mr. FISH, who has been selected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. WASHBURNE, is a native of this City, his family long having held a position of wealth and prominence. He was born in 1809, and in his youth was surrounded by all the advantages which wealth can command. He was educated at Columbia College, and having graduated, commenced the study of law, and in 1830 was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of the State. Though eminently fitted by education and natural abilities for the successful prosecution of the legal profession, he was restrained from accepting a large practice by the cares which a large inheritance devolved upon him. Called upon to superintend a large fortune for the benefit of himself and others, he was withdrawn so much from his chosen career that he was at length forced to relinquish it altogether. He early manifested a deep solicitude in political affairs, although not a proclaimed partisan. In 1834 he was nominated for the Assembly by the Whig Party, but with the party suffered defeat. Nominations of different kinds were subsequently tendered him by his party, but he persistently declined them. In 1842 he was elected to Congress from the Sixth District, his personal popularity contributing materially to the success of the ticket. As a member of Congress Mr. FISH was not distinguished in debate, but his integrity, and his promptness and persistency in urging the adoption of measures for the benefit of his constituents, won for him universal commendation. While in Washington he was particularly noted for his hospitality, and his private parlors were at all times open and thronged with the foremost statesmen of the land. In 1847 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor of the State, and at the close of his term of office was chosen Governor. His administration was singularly free from partisan quarrels, and was maintained with firmness and dignity. His messages indicated the possession by the author of high literary abilities, and were commended by all parties. During his administration the slavery question was being agitated in Congress and throughout the country. Mr. FISH was early committed in favor of the Wilmot Proviso, and did not fail to urge his views upon the people of the State. He was subsequently elected to the United States Senate, where he served from 1851 to 1857 with marked ability.

At the expiration of the term for which he was elected, Mr. FISH retired to private life, and has mingled comparatively little in political affairs since that time. During the war Mr. FISH, as a prominent private citizen, was conspicuous for the support he gave the Government, and was at all times to be found first among our wealthy and prominent citizens in devising means to secure the speedy suppression of the rebellion. He gave largely of his means to secure this end, and responded liberally to the calls made upon all patriotic citizens to provide for our sick and wounded soldiers. In 1862 he was notified by telegraph that President LINCOLN had appointed him and Bishop AMES Commissioners to go within the Confederate lines and look after the comfort of our prisoners, and to establish a basis of exchange. He replied forthwith by telegraph, accepting the responsible position, and at the earliest moment entered upon its duties. Although the Commissioners were refused admission inside the rebel lines, they nevertheless arranged a cartel of exchange, which was observed for some time, and which secured the release of hundreds of brave men from rebel dungeons.

During the past few years Mr. FISH has been a warm friend and ardent admirer of General GRANT, and aided to the extent of his ability in securing his election. The cares of a large estate have prevented Mr. FISH taking an active part in national politics, but he is known to entertain very decided opinions on all points of public interest, and that his opinions are generally in accord with those of President GRANT.

SAILORS' BOARDING-HOUSES.

Meeting of the Housekeepers' Association at Botanic Hall.

Yesterday afternoon a special meeting of the Sailors' Boarding-house Keepers' Benevolent Association was held at Botanic Hall, East Broadway, for the purpose of protesting against an article which appeared in the TIMES of the 2d of March, in reference to the character of their houses.

Mr. HEFFRIN was called to the chair. There were about eighty members of the Association present.

The Chairman said; In the first place I would state the object of this meeting. It is called for the purpose of contradicting the outrageous article which appeared in the TIMES. In this article every man who keeps a sailors' boarding-house is identified as the keeper of a piece of prostitution, and his wife as a bawd. We want to contradict this. We want to show the public at large that we are not of that class of persons. This article does not make any exceptions; but sets us all down as among that class. Now, as there are a number of reporters present, and among them, as I understand, a representative of the TIMES, I would wish to state a few particulars in regard to the keepers of sailors' boarding-houses. With the exception of two or three at the utmost, they are men who have followed the sea in their early life—some for a longer, others for a shorter period. I went to sea for fourteen years; and I think when I tell my story that it will agree pretty well with the experience of most of those who belong to our Association. I went to sea, as I have said, in my younger days, till I got married and had a family. Then it became necessary for me to look out for something to do on shore. I was no longer fitted for the sea. What was I to do? What are all the men in our position to do? They have not had the benefit of education; I am sure I often feel the want of education badly enough, and wish very much that I had it; and I guess many who are here feel the same way. The only chance that offered itself for me was to take a sailors' boarding-house, which I did, having saved a little money. That is the way we get into this business; and I think we know better how to deal with sailors than most persons. We have followed the sea ourselves; and we know how it is with the men when they come ashore. There was a meeting here of the Seamen's Association the other day, in regard to the raising of the sailors' wages. But how was it that the wages were lowered? Why, it was because the boarding-house keepers, finding that everything was so dull in the shipping business, had agreed to lower their charges to the seaman and ship the men for what they could get. Then it was that these merchant philanthropists, as they call themselves, reduced the wages of the sailor to $15 a month. They would not give them $10, if they could help it. Well, then, we held a meeting and raised it up to $30; and then they had to pay that money, because we had determined not to let our men go under that rate of wages, with such exorbitant a bill; for a boiler a day is all that is asked, and if a man is not worth that on a ship he is worth nothing. So the merchants had to pay it; and I say it is the boarding-house keepers who have raised the sailors' wages. We are always their friends, and the true friends of the sailor. Take the case of a ship arriving here with emigrants. The men are not only penniless, but are without clothes and in a most filthy condition. Will those gentlemen who write the articles in the newspapers take such men into their houses, and shelter them, and feed them? I guess not. Where are they to go? They have to go to the Station-houses, if they find not the boarding-houses to go to. Well, the boarding-house keeper has to give them money for a bath, for he cannot receive them into his house in a filthy condition. We give them clothes; we have to give them food; we have to give them tobacco and money. Well, we must get paid for these things, and how? It is by shipping them. That is our only chance. Those men remain around two, four, six weeks sometimes; and we have to keep them all that time, for they are penniless. Last week I shipped a man who had been in my house four months, and all I got when I shipped him was $25. And I guess I did that pretty well. But who was going to pay me? Yet I am put down as one of the landsharks. But that is the way these things happen, as is the experience of all present. Sometimes I get paid all my charges, or some; for if I did not I should soon have to shut up my house. However, you all know that the business is not a pleasant one; and I can say for myself that if I could get another I would leave it. [The speaker here read extracts from the article in question.] Now, I don't believe that there are more than two or three persons in this business who have bars for the sale of liquor in their houses. And as to saying that women of bad character are kept in the houses of any of the members of this Association, you know it is utterly untrue. No persons are admitted to our Society but honest, moral men; a committee of investigation seeks into the character of all who apply for admittance. An instance, because a false case was tried before the courts, and it was decided that we were not compelled to keep a license. I say that the whole of the charges contained in this article are false.

Inquiries having been made by some of the members as to what had been done in reference to the subject at a former meeting, it was stated that a committee had been appointed that went on the editor of the TIMES and induce him to contradict the article.

Messrs. BURNS, MAHER and KENNEDY, the Committee in question, reported that they had not succeeded in inducing the editor to contradict the article. They had taken legal advice upon the matter, and were informed that no action for slander or libel against a corporation could be entered. If anybody said that the corporation of the City of New-York was a set of thieves, the corporation, as a body, had no remedy. But if they said any member was a thief, he could sue the party for slander.

The meeting then adjourned.

THE LINCOLN MONUMENT.

The Design—Bronze Statue of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.

At a meeting of the prominent members of Plymouth Church, held at the residence of Mr. C. B. CAMP, No. 96 Columbia-street, Brooklyn, on Wednesday evening, Mr. JOHN T. HOWARD in the chair, the subject of raising the sum of $6,000 to pay for the colossal bronze statue of Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER, one of the thirty-six figures which is to adorn the National Lincoln Monument at Washington, was fully considered.

Mr. HOWARD stated the object of the meeting, and called upon Mr. WM. H. CORKHILL, the general agent of the Monument Association, to explain the matter more fully.

Mr. CORKHILL gave the following brief description of the design of the whole work: It is to be erected on the grounds of the Government to the east of the Capitol, and will be of a triangular shape, seventy feet in height, the top figure being that of ABRAHAM LINCOLN, in a sitting posture, in the act of signing the Emancipation Proclamation, the height of the sitting figure being eleven feet. The pedestal will be of Quincy granite, and the figures bronze, manufactured from rebel cannon, presented by the Government to the Association. From the base of the monument to the top will be four distinct ledges, each containing groups of colossal statues. The first group near the base of the monument will be six equestrian statues of Generals GRANT, SHERMAN, SHERIDAN, THOMAS, WADSWORTH and HOWARD. On the next ledge are three groups representing Slavery—the first, the slave in his lowest state after his importation; the second, while in a state of slavery; and the third, in the person of FRED DOUGLASS, representing the negro at the high tide of civilization and intellectual vigor. On the next ledge are three groups, representing the members of the Cabinet, clergymen and others, who were prominent in the support of the Government during the war. Among those of the Cabinet members already selected are CHASE, STANTON and SEWARD; HENRY WARD BEECHER and Bishop SIMPSON will represent the loyal clergy, and DR. BELLOWS, JAMES E. YEATMAN and GEO. H. STUART the Sanitary and Christian Commissions. The next ledge will be adorned with figures of Liberty, Justice and Time. In the centre of the monument will be three bas-reliefs representing scenes in the history of the war.

Mr. CORKHILL said the cost of the entire monument, outside of the bronze contributed by the Government, would be over $200,000, and it had been assigned by the friends of each person whose statue was to adorn the monument, to raise the money to pay the cost of its construction. The price had been fixed at $6,000 each for the pedestrian figures. The friends of most of the subjects had already pledged the necessary amounts, and there was no doubt that the matter would be brought to a successful termination. All the figures were to be designed by CLARK MILLS and his two sons. To cast all the figures will take 700 tons of bronze.

Mr. E. A. STUDWELL moved the adoption of the following resolutions, which, after a brief conversation, were adopted:

Whereas, The National Lincoln Monument Association at Washington, D. C., having passed the following resolution: "That a colossal bronze statue of Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER be and hereby is adopted as one of the figures of the representative men to be placed in the National Lincoln Monument to be erected by this Association;" therefore,

Resolved, First, that in designating our townsman to represent the loyal pulpit, the Association has not only honored this city, but themselves, in selecting for such a position Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER. Second, that this assignment will gladden the hearts of every true American. Third, that we, the immediate neighbors and friends of Rev. Mr. BEECHER, do give to the enterprise our hearty approval, and will zealously cooperate with the Association in commemorating his valuable services to the cause of liberty and humanity, by securing prompt contributions to the Becher Statue Fund.

On motion of Mr. C. B. CAMP the following-named gentlemen were appointed a committee to solicit subscriptions:

Messrs. M. K. Moodie, George A. Bell, Lorin Palmer, Nathan Southwick, Thomas H. Bird, O. B. Coombs, J. F. Conklin, M. D., S. M. Griswold, T. G. Sherman, A. D. Wheelock, J. T. Howard, H. S. Weld, R. D. Benedict, J. B. Murray, W. E. Caldwell, E. E. Bowen, H. C. King, C. L. Allen, Dr. George I. Bennet, A. Fitzgerald, J. A. Fowle, H. E. Morrell, M. D., M. C. Ogden and Mr. E. A. Studwell.

On motion of Mr. HORACE B. CLAFLIN, Mr. C. B. CAMP was appointed Treasurer.

The meeting then adjourned.

The Union Pacific Railroad.

The extraordinary occurrences of Wednesday at the stockholders' meeting for the election of directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company caused a continuance of interest on the street yesterday. Rumors of various kinds were afloat concerning the facts and the probable result of the case, and many curious and anxious questioners called at the Company's office, No. 20 Nassau-street, to gather information. With the exception of an unusual number of distinguished capitalists and others, who were in attendance as stockholders, there was no remarkable excitement visible in the office, and the ordinary daily routine of business only was observable. At 1 o'clock an adjourned meeting was held, at which nothing of importance transpired, except another adjournment, to meet at Washington, on Thursday, the 18th inst. Messrs. AMES and DILLON, the directors who were reported to have been arrested on Wednesday, appeared before Judge BARNARD yesterday, and were dismissed on their parole, to appear when required by the Court.

111½— vs. ——.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT—SOUTHERN DISTRICT.

Before Judge Blatchford.

In the Matter of Henry H. Watts, Bankrupt.—This bankrupt applied for leave to amend his schedules. The application was opposed by the creditors. The Register, doubting his power to allow the amendment, certified the question to the Court for its decision.

BLATCHFORD, J.—Under section 26 and General Order No. 7, the Register has power, under General Order No. 5, to allow a petitioning bankrupt to amend his schedules on complying with General Order No. 32. The application is an ex-parte one, of which no notice is necessary. No creditor has a right to oppose any such application, and therefore no issue of fact or of law within section 4 can be raised or contested in regard to it, to be decided by the Judge. If a Register improperly refuse an application to amend, the bankrupt can, under section 6, take the opinion of the Judge on a certificate of the Register on the question. In this case the allowance of the amendment cannot in any manner prejudice the right of the creditor to oppose the discharge of the bankrupt for his having omitted the matter in question from his original schedule. The order of the Register allowing the amendment in no manner concludes the creditor on the point, as the creditor is no party to the proceeding so as to be estopped by the order from availing himself of any ground of opposition to a discharge which he would have had in the absence of the order. Still, if the case be a proper one for allowing the amendment in question, it is proper for the Register to allow it, in terms without prejudice to the right of the creditor to oppose the discharge upon the ground of the omission of the matter from the original schedules.

DAMAGES AGAINST THE CITY.

Daniel Bradley vs. The Mayor, &c.—The plaintiff in this action was driving his carriage through Greenwich-street in November, 1866, in the night time. Owing to a hole in the pavement, his horses and carriage were injured. It was shown that the defect in the pavement had been known to the City authorities for eight or ten days. Verdict for the plaintiff for the sum of $200.

Part II.—Before Judge Barnard.

WHEN THE CITY IS NOT LIABLE FOR DAMAGES.

Minot F. Winch vs. The Mayor.—In this case the plaintiff sought to recover damages by reason of his horse and cart having fallen into an excavation in Eighteenth-street, near Third-avenue, on the 30th of October, 1866, in the daytime. The Court, on motion, dismissed the complaint, on the ground that no notice of the defect in the pavement had been given to the proper authorities.

For the plaintiff, Mr. Schemerhorn; for the City, Mr. John K. Hackett and Mr. H. J. Forker.

THE NITRO-GLYCERINE CASE—NO VERDICT.

Wells, Fargo & Co. vs. Otto Burstenbinder et al.—This case, the particulars of which were fully reported in the TIMES of Thursday, was submitted to the jury by Judge BARNARD in a charge, of which the following is the substance. He said:

The action could only be maintained on the ground that defendant was negligent in packing the oil, or in not notifying the carrier of its explosive character. Negligence was the want of that care which a man of ordinary care and prudence would exercise. In applying these principles to a case where negligence is imputed in the packing of a new article of commerce, the explosive character of which was not generally known, the question was not to be determined either by that measure of prudence which a scientific man might be supposed to adopt in reference to the nature of the component parts of the article, nor by that prudence which a person wholly unacquainted with the nature of the article might adopt; but rather by a mixture of the two. It was the prudence which those who dealt in the article were accustomed to adopt. If the evidence showed that there was a general mode adopted among dealers in this article for packing it, and that defendant packed it according to that mode, then he was not liable, although some few, either from extreme caution or a more intimate knowledge of the character of the article, might have adopted a safer mode. Of course, how much of the defendant had imputed knowledge of the intimate knowledge, and also knew that a safer mode of packing had been adopted by another, he would have been guilty of negligence in not adopting it. It also followed that if there were no general mode of packing, and that the defendant had no knowledge of the character of the article superior to that of the community at large, he could only be held to the exercise of that care which a person of ordinary prudence would exercise in packing an article not generally known to be of an explosive character. As to whether there was negligence in not giving notice depended upon the same principles. 1. Whether it was the custom of the trade to give notice. 2. Whether the defendant knew the explosive character of the article, and that in consequence thereof he omitted to give notice of its character. 3. Whether a prudent man not possessing such knowledge as the defendant of the article (but not being generally known) would deem it necessary to give such notice. If any one of these questions were answered in the affirmative, then the verdict must be for the plaintiff. If it were in the negative, then the defendant should succeed.

The jury went out at about 2 o'clock. At the hour of adjournment, they not having agreed, a sealed verdict was ordered for Friday morning.

MARCH 11.

Before Chief Justice Barbour and a Jury.

LOST BONDS.

Henry T. Romerize vs. The Eaas River National Bank.—This cause, which was briefly noticed at its commencement on Monday last, was this morning brought to a close, and as the facts and circumstances surrounding the case, as developed in the course of the trial, are somewhat peculiar, some portion of the testimony may prove interesting both to banking associations and the community at large. The action is brought to recover the sum of $22,000, the value with interest of twelve United States 6s (1881) bonds, with coupons attached, alleged by the plaintiff to have been deposited in a package with the defendant for safe keeping on May 12, 1865. The defence interposed was that the package was delivered to the plaintiff several times during the months of 1867, and was there finally taken away by him a few days before the 17th day of May, 1867, and never returned to the bank. The action was brought in April, 1868, and, after issue was joined, an order was obtained by the plaintiff's counsel to examine the President, Cashier and clerks of the bank, as parties to the action, before trial. A motion was made before Judge McCunn to vacate this order on the ground that the officers and clerks were not parties, but the motion was denied. Under this order a very extended examination of the officers and clerks of the bank was had, and the theory of the defence, as stated, was, that after, in this examination, compelling the officers to fix the day and date when they claim the package was delivered, the plaintiff concocted the plan of manufacturing evidence to show that the package was seen at the bank at a later day. The plaintiff's counsel, Mr. Cooke, also took the position, and asserted in his opening that it was hardly possible for both sides to be mistaken, but that one or the other was wilfully wrong. The plaintiff was also examined at the instance of the defendant as a party before the trial, but not until after all the officers and the clerks of the bank had been examined. The testimony of John Levi, of Philadelphia, a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, was taken by commission, so that, in fact, each knew pretty well the theory of his adversary.

The plaintiff was the first witness called on the trial, and testified to the delivery of the package of bonds to the then cashier, Mr. Carman, from whom he took a receipt in his pass-book, as follows:

MAY 12, 1865.

Left by Mr. Romertze, a package of Government securities, to be put in the safe at his own risk.

N. S. CARMAN.

He further testified that he had never had the package in his hands afterward, and that the only times he ever saw it afterward was once in January, 1867, when a clerk, Mr. McMurray, at the time of handing him his tin cash-box, asked him if he wanted his package, and he said he did not, and again on the 8th of May, 1867, when he testified he took it in the hands of Mr. Charles Jenkins, the President, and that John Levi, of Philadelphia, was with him at that time. He states that he then, on his way to Europe, called the package to the attention of asking the President to put his name to the receipt on the pass-book, for the reason that the former cashier who had signed it had left the bank, and that the President then told him there was no necessity for it, as the bank would take the same care of the package as it always had done. He further testified that the next conversation he had was in December, 1867, when he called and demanded the package, and the President and cashier looked for it in the safe and could not find it, and that afterward, in January, 1868, he again made a formal demand and exhibited his receipt, and the President then claimed he had delivered him, plaintiff, the package a long while before.

On cross-examination plaintiff testified that he did not know the numbers of the bonds; that he had the numbers in a book, but had given this book to Mme. Bonillon, a schoolmistress, to whom he boarded, and she had mislaid it; that coupons were attached to the bonds, and he had not cut them off for two years and a half between the time he deposited them and the time he demanded them, for the reason that he did not require them and was unwell and unable to attend to business, but that he had been frequently to the bank during that time, and made deposits and drawn out checks to the amount of hundreds, and that he went to Europe in 1865, 1866 and 1867, and to Washington, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston and other places in relation to various patents.

The next witness called by the plaintiff was E. D. McMurray, now a clerk in the Stuyvesant Bank, who testified that he saw the package of bonds when first left, in May, 1865, and once offered to hand it to Romertze in January, 1867, who said he did not wish it.

The deposition of John Levi, of Philadelphia, was then read, corroborating the plaintiff as to the interview alleged to have taken place on May 18, 1867, at the bank, between Romertze and Mr. Jenkins, the President of the Bank.

On cross-interrogatories Levi testified he came from Philadelphia that morning, arriving here at six A. M.; took breakfast at the Astor House restaurant; did not register his name; saw Romertze as he was leaving the store of the bank about quarter to eleven, and gave him something to take to his brother in Europe; walked with him to the bank; went from there to the steamer; saw Romertze off and took the two o'clock train that afternoon to Philadelphia; that he saw no one else and did no other business. This statement the defence claimed was a pure invention.

The plaintiff then rested, and defendant's counsel moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the bank was a mere naked bailee without hire, and was not liable except for gross negligence. The motion was denied, and the defendant then called Mr. Charles Jenkins, President of the Bank, who testified he had been in such for the last ten years; that in January, 1865, Romertze opened an account in the Bank, which was closed Oct. 7, 1867; that in May, 1865, he deposited a package for safe keeping; that in June, 1865, the plaintiff drew all the money out, but six cents, took away his package, and said he was going to Europe; that in October, 1865, he commenced depositing again, and left a package, and in July, 1866, he drew all the money out except 6 cents, took away his package, and stated that he was going to Europe; that in December, 1866, he again left a package and made further deposits, and a few days before May 17, 1867, he took away his package and never returned it, and on May 17, 1867, he overdrew his account $1 19, which he made good Oct. 7, 1867, (having been to Europe in the mean time,) by paying that specific sum, and never made any deposits afterward, and that his gross deposits in three years only amounted to about $15,000; that he had no conversation with Romertze or Levi on May 18, 1867, which was discount day; that they were not in the bank that day, and that he never saw Levi in his life; that Romertze never asked him to sign a receipt, and he never knew he had one till January, 1868; that he (Jenkins) delivered the package to Romertze personally the last time a day or two before May 17, 1867; that Romertze was in the bank three or four times from Oct. 1, 1867, to Jan. 1, 1868, complaining that notice of the overdraft of $1 19 had been sent in envelopes, which he found open at his boarding-house; that they thought there he was a rich man, and it would affect his credit, and also charged the bank with stating things derogatory to his character, during none of which interviews did he say anything about the package of bonds; but early in January, 1868, he came and demanded it, and was told in answer that it was delivered to him several months before; that the loss in premium on gold and interest was a large sum, and that about $2,000 in gold coupons was then left undrawn.

Xenas E Newell, the Cashier, testified to Romertze's coming to the bank several times in the Fall about the notice of overdraft, but said nothing about a package until January, 1868, when he called and said he had left a package of bonds somewhere, and he thought he had left it there.

Charles Kyte and C. C. Corson also testified to Romertze's coming to the bank in the Fall of 1867, complaining of notice of overdraft, but said nothing about any package of bonds.

J. A. Johnson, Jr., of Hatch, Foyte & Co., testified that by having the numbers of the coupons they could be easily traced.

The next witnesses were John Spencer, Clerk of the General Sessions, who produced the record of Romertze's conviction and sentence in April, 1852, for false pretences, and Charles A. Spencer, Esq., was called and identified Romertze as the convict, he having defended him on that trial. The plaintiff then produced a pardon, signed by Governor John T. Hoffman, dated Feb. 20, 1869.

Next followed the testimony of Mr. Pearce, Mr. Peteler, Mr. Lukomski and Drs. Joseph Wooster and Willard Parker, who swore they would not believe Romertze under oath, and next came two witnesses from Philadelphia, Benj. Kellogg and William Harper, Jr., who testified that they knew John Levi, and that he was unworthy of belief.

Romertze was then called on his own behalf, and admitted he was the person convicted in 1852, and stated he was afterward appointed Consul under Buchanan's Administration.

Ex-Judge Beebe, one of his counsel, was called to sustain his character for truth and veracity, as were also Mr. Wilson, Mr. Phillips, Mr. Cook and Mr. Parr. James M. Smith and Mr. Verren were called to sustain John Levi, they testifying that they knew him here in 1866. This closed the testimony, and counsel occupied from one to two hours on each side in presenting the case to the jury. After a brief charge by the Chief Justice the jury retired with directions to bring in a sealed verdict.

At the opening of the Court this morning the jury brought in a verdict in favor of defendants, attached to which was something in the nature of a special presentment, in which they recorded their judgment that the President of the East River National Bank was deserving of censure "for the loose manner in which the business in relation to these bonds was transacted." Judge BARBOUR seemed in doubt what disposition to make of such an unusual document, but finally acceded to the jury that, "carelessness as might have been the mode of doing business to which the jury had reference, yet, he was informed, that it was nothing uncommon for customers to deposit such packages with the banks even without any receipts whatever." In the paper containing this presentment of censure, was also the verdict of the jury, by which it appeared that the verdict was first made out in favor of the plaintiff, but the word plaintiff had a line drawn over it, and the word defendants written thereunder. Whether this was merely an error in first writing out the verdict or not, counsel for plaintiff accepted it as an indication that the jury labored under much doubt and uncertainty in forming their verdict, and on that ground and the further ground of the verdict being contrary to the weight of testimony, they moved to have it set aside. The motion was denied, and thirty days given to make a case on appeal, with an allowance to defendants of $500.

Beebe, Donohoe & Cook, and A. R. Lawrence, for plaintiff; Ex-Judge Fullerton, Horatio F. Averill, and Thomas Allison, for defendant.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD INJUNCTION.

James Fisk, Jr., vs. Ames, Dillon, et al.—In this case already reported, Messrs. Ames, Dillon and five others of the directors of the Union Pacific Railroad, were brought up this morning before Judge Barnard on the writ of attachment, issued in consequence of the alleged disobedience of the order of the Court on the injunction for ousting the Deputy Sheriffs who undertook to serve papers at the time of the election of directors in Nassau-street on Wednesday. On the application of counsel, four days' time have been given by the Court in which to file interrogatories, and ten days to file the answers thereto. The argument was, after some discussion, adjourned to the 1st day of April, before Judge Barnard, at Special Term. Mr. Sidney Dillon, who is the person that is alleged to have ousted summarily the Deputy Sheriffs who made their appearance in Nassau-street on Wednesday to serve the injunction, has been held to bail in $20,000. Mr. Ames, the President, and five other officers of the Company were held in $10,000 each for their appearance.

"THE NEW ERA."

Pierce et al. vs. Pool.—This case, which has been heretofore noticed, is an action to recover $2,000 as a balance of subscription for stock of the New Era Association, of which the plaintiffs were the trustees. The defence set up is a denial of the existence of the Association, and counter claim of $2,000, alleged to have been obtained from the defendants by plaintiffs through misrepresentation and fraud, and which sum defendant seeks to recover back. The foundation on the part of defendant was that no paper had been published as proposed by plaintiffs, and that he paid his money with the understanding that $20,000 of the capital was already paid in and $50,000 pledged. It did appear, however, that the testimony of a number of gentlemen, among whom were Dr. John Cotton Smith, Thomas McElrath, Esq., and Professor Francis W. Upham, of Rutgers College, that the publication was intended in good faith, that the office had been rented, much necessary printing done, a large amount of necessary expenses incurred, a large number of gentlemen consulted and interested in the enterprise, and a large amount of editorial matter prepared and held in readiness for the use of the paper. Professor Upham also testified that he was engaged as editor-in-chief of the contemplated paper, that he entered upon the necessary preparations for his duties as such, that he made it a condition with the trustees that $50,000 of the subscription money should be in the treasurer's hands before the first number of the paper was issued, that he understood the sum of $50,000 had been actually subscribed, but neither he nor the trustees deemed it necessary that the gentlemen pledging his money should withdraw it from their private business until all necessary preparations were completed for the publication of the paper; that everything seemed harmonious and hopeful until he returned in the Fall, after a few days' absence in the country, when he was met by the defendant Pool, who wanted to withdraw and receive back his money, but without assigning any reason therefor which impressed him (witness) as at all satisfactory. This act of defendant was the first symptom of dissatisfaction which arose to impede the full realization of the purpose of the trustees, and which finally resulted in failure. Soon after this interview with defendant, Professor Upham deemed it proper to tender his resignation for the reasons assigned in the following letter, submitted in testimony, and which shows very clearly the feelings and motives which prompted him and his associates to inaugurate the enterprise out of which this controversy has arisen:

To Messrs. Pierce, Elmer, Jarvis and Wetmore, Trustees of the New Era:

GENTLEMEN; When, without any expectation of any such proof of your confidence, at your request you came to me for the purpose of conferring as to the New Era, and elected me editor-in-chief thereof, with a salary which sufficiently showed your appreciation of the importance and difficulty of the services you expected me to render, I frankly stated to you reasons in the course of my studies for some years past, and in the deeply inwrought convictions of my heart and my heart, that the Christianity common to all Christians was infinitely more important than the distinguishing features of any sect, which induced me to think that I might properly undertake the task of such novelty, such delicacy, of such difficulty, and at the same time of such importance to the well-being of Christianity in this period of jarrings and dissensions, when there seems to be unity save in the hosts of Infidelity; and at your unanimous request, I accepted a post which it seemed to me presumptuous folly in any man to seek, and sin in any man, if providentially called to it, to decline. Leaving in your hands, where it seemed exclusively to belong, the whole charge of those financial and business arrangements without whose perfection it was plain to us all it were better not to begin than to begin but to fail, I gave a few months to forming in my own mind as clear a conception as might be of the ideal of a paper corresponding with your reasonable expectations; to making myself acquainted with the religious papers of this country and of England; to revising some manuscripts which admitted of the use I then proposed to make of them, and to preparing others in advance for the demands of a journal which I then proposed, and to other labors which might aid the common design. In the meantime I was informed that difficulties of various kinds, but all growing out of the important matter of the finances, must postpone any public action; and I received a communication from you, through your secretary, conveying a renewed assurance that, whenever these difficulties should be overcome, it was your pleasure that I should enter on my public duties. Here the matter has rested up to this time. I regret now to be obliged to state a fact which must close relations between us—relations which, on my side, I have no reason to regret. On my return in last Autumn to New-York, while on the road to Boston, I was suddenly attacked with an illness which, though brief, was violent and dangerous, which exhausted so much of my vitality, and which up to this moment has left such marks of it in my constitution, that I have not the physical ability to attempt the arduous duties you requested me to undertake, and must therefore decline so to do. One point of some little delicacy only remains. It would be your wish, I doubt not, that I should receive some compensation for the time and labor spent in a service to which you called me, unless indeed my necessary withdrawal from it should cancel any such claim. But happily my circumstances are such that the small amount which would offset this is not necessary to me, and I cheerfully contribute it as a free-will gift to a good cause, and am happy that in so doing I follow the disinterested example of your own far greater sacrifices and labors, wholly unrequited, as I fear they may be, save by the consciousness that you have tried to do a good work in your day and generation, and by the belief which I entertain with a strength of prophetic conviction, that the movement you have inaugurated will be the seed, which even though it should die, will spring up and bear fruit an hundred fold. And now it only remains for me to thank you for the honor you have conferred upon me, and to wish that in all things your success may be equal to your earnest and persevering zeal and to your sincere desire for the unity of the Church.

Respectfully and truly yours,

FRANCIS W. UPHAM.

The total receipts of Butter for the week ending this day are 11,823 packages, which are larger than expected, although not much over the actual requirements of trade. The increase is composed of some lots of Canada stock, which had been detained en route by the heavy snows, which arrived in a body. We are advised from the several dairy districts of New-York and Pennsylvania, that the whole stock of Butter has been forwarded, which we think is correct, and if so there is a scanty supply of stock, even with the unexpected addition of a few thousand casks of Canadian make. The market rules firm and steadily at our unchanged quotations, with a good fair demand from all classes of buyers.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

In the House of Commons last evening the Secretary of War made a statement showing that a reduction of £1,000,000 had been made in the army estimates. He said the colonial military establishments were to be reduced. A subscription is being raised in Dublin for the benefit of the discharged Fenian convicts.

CUBA.

The Captain of a Spanish vessel which arrived at Havana yesterday reports passing a fleet of five steamers bound for the Cuban coast. This fleet is supposed to contain a small army of American fillibusters, who, with arms and ammunition, are to join the insurgents. The Spanish war vessel which was detailed to watch the Peruvian monitors also arrived at Havana, and reports those vessels beyond the Cuban coast, and, probably, at St. Thomas. The political prisoners are to be sent to the Island of Fernando Po, on Sunday next. Among them are some Cuban gentlemen of great wealth and position.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate yesterday a large number of bills were reported back from Committees for future action. A resolution requesting the President to inform the Senate whether Venezuela had paid the first instalment of claims awarded American citizens was adopted. The bill to amend the public credit was then taken up and discussed by Messrs. SUMNER, SHERMAN, CALL, WILLIAMS, and others. The debate was interrupted by the appearance of General PORTER with a message from the President, whereupon the Senate went into executive session. But a short time elapsed before the doors were again opened and the debate on the public credit bill resumed. An amendment offered by Mr. SUMNER to strike out the second section was agreed to. Several other amendments were offered and discussed, but without disposing of the bill the Senate at 4 o'clock adjourned till Monday next.

The House was not in session yesterday.

GENERAL.

The steamboats Swan and Fanita came in collision yesterday near Fort Delaware, and the former immediately sank in deep water. Her passengers and crew were all saved, some of them being rescued from the water. Several persons were slightly scalded, but none fatally. It was quite foggy at the time of the accident. The Swan was plying between Philadelphia and Salem, N. J., and the Fanita was en route to Philadelphia from New-York.

The Pennsylvania Senate yesterday ratified the Constitutional Amendment; yeas 18, nays 15.

San Francisco is in a fever of excitement at present over the gold discoveries at the white Pine mines. Fifty-six companies have been organized in that city since the 1st of March to work leads in the White Pine region.

The Select Committee of the Wisconsin Legislature is unanimous in favor of the repeal of the law of that State which makes imprisonment for life the highest penalty for murder. The majority report of the Committee declares that murder in the first degree should be punished with death.

A Texas paper of Feb. 27 mentions the crossing into Mexico of Colonel QUIROGA, who had been under the surveillance of the United States military authorities, but had evaded their vigilance. QUIROGA was one of the ablest of the Imperial officers, and was specially marked out for execution after his capture at Mexico, but escaped with MARQUEZ.

Yesterday morning the house occupied by GABRIEL KIDD and his family, in Philadelphia, fell down, burying the whole family in the ruins. Mrs. KIDD, her son and daughter were instantly killed, and Mr. KIDD was severely injured.

The schooner Mai, which left New-Orleans a few days since, was stopped at the mouth of the river by a telegram from the Custom-house officials, upon suspicion of having on board arms and ammunition for the revolutionary party in Cuba. The Mai cleared for Kingston, Jamaica, with a cargo of lumber.

The Constitutional Amendment was adopted by the Lower House of the Georgia Legislature by yeas 74, nays 69.

An extensive fire occurred in Troy, yesterday morning, which destroyed property of the value of $75,000. The insurance companies which are the chief losers are the Liverpool and London, Manhattan, Lorillard, Phœnix, Home, Germania, Atlantic, Putnam and Fulton.

On Wednesday, a gentleman in Boston, who had ordered a musical catalogue from New-York, received it in an unsealed envelope, and along with it two drop letters, with the Post Office stamp in New-York upon them, and addressed to two ladies in that City. The letters were sent back; but how came they in the envelope?

Ex-President JOHNSON arrived in Baltimore yesterday morning, and was received by Governor BOWIE and other State officials and escorted through the streets by a civic and military procession. He afterward held a reception at the Exchange, and was greeted by thousands of citizens.

The Valentine will case of Fall River, involving $2,000,000 of property, has been decided by the Supreme Court, which decrees the distribution thereof as fast as the heirs become of age. The heirs are four in number, and but one is yet entitled to his share under this decision.

Two men named SIMMONS, who were supposed to be horse thieves, were hung in Butler, Mo., last week by a gang of disguised men. It is a matter of doubt whether the executioners were members of a vigilance committee or of the gang to which the murdered men belonged, who were afraid they were about to turn State's evidence.

The Maine House of Representatives have refused, by a vote of 95 to 45, to abolish capital punishment.

It is stated in the Review, the organ of the Society of Friends in Philadelphia, that President GRANT has applied to that body for lists of names of persons suitable for Indian Agents, of men who will truly represent a paternal and beneficent Government.

The annual dinner of the Alumni of Williams College, Massachusetts, took place at the Astor House last evening, Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD in the chair, and about 150 gentlemen present. Speeches were delivered by the President, WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT; President HOPKINS, of Williams; Professor CARTER, Judge BENEDICT and others, and the entire entertainment was extremely agreeable.

An inquest held yesterday over the remains of HENRY M. STEELE, who shot himself dead at his boarding-house in Irving-place on Wednesday, resulted in a verdict of "death by suicide, while laboring under temporary insanity."

A barrel of alcohol exploded yesterday in the cellar of the Everett House by ignition from a lighted lamp, and the storekeeper was greatly burned. The flames set fire to the building, which sustained a damage of $5,000.

In the case of the colored woman Louisa M. Jacobs vs. The Atlantic Navigation Company, tried in Part II. Common Pleas, before Judge DALY, the jury failed to agree, and were discharged yesterday morning.

In the case of HENRY M. PIRCE, Jr., et al., Trustees of the New Era, vs. GEO. H. POOL, which has been on trial two days in the Court of Common Pleas, the defendant yesterday morning withdrew his defence and all suggestions of bad faith against the plaintiffs, whereupon the plaintiffs, having obtained the vindication for which the action was brought, consented to its discontinuance.

The Board of Aldermen yesterday adopted a resolution appointing a Committee to receive the Fenian prisoners, WARREN and COSTELLO, on their arrival here; also, a resolution directing the public offices to be closed hereafter at 3 P. M.

The Board of Assistant Aldermen yesterday adopted a resolution requesting the City Printers to pay their employes the same prices for general as for City work. Mr. PINCKNEY offered a resolution directing the Clerk of the Common Council to advertise for contracts for the public printing, and award the same to the lowest bidder. It was referred. The resolution to fix the 1st of March, 1869, as the time for opening Church-street, was concurred in.

Cotton was decidedly lower and quite dull yesterday. Flour was more freely offered and purchased at easier rates. Wheat closed more firmly on a fair business. Corn was lower and slow of sale. Oats and Lard quiet and weak in price. Pork was brisker and dearer. Groceries were inactive. The Wool auction was well attended, and resulted, as a whole, satisfactorily. The Dry Goods sales attracted a fair attendance, and fair prices were realized for desirable stock. Freights were dull.

The Cabinet Complete.

We may look upon the Cabinet as at last complete. The programme announced in the TIMES, alone of all the City papers, yesterday morning, was carried out during the day, and the names which it embraced were sent in to the Senate by the President and were promptly confirmed. The Cabinet now stands:

Secretary of State—HAMILTON FISH, New-York.

Secretary of Treasury—GEO. S. BOUTWELL, Massachusetts.

Secretary of Interior—JACOB D. COX, Ohio.

Secretary of Navy—A. E. BORIE, Pennsylvania.

Secretary of War—JOHN A. RAWLINGS.

Postmaster-General—J. A. J. CRESWELL, Maryland.

Attorney-General—E. R. HOAR, Massachusetts.

There may be a change in the name last mentioned, in order to prevent the appointment of two members from the State of Massachusetts.

The changes which have been made will strengthen the political element in the composition of the Cabinet, and will, in that respect at least, render it more satisfactory to the country. Mr. BOUTWELL lacks the practical business experience and habits which Mr. STEWART would have brought to the duties of the office, and the faith of the country in his ability to accomplish needful reforms in that department of the public service will be somewhat less. But he is a thoroughly honest and capable man, and will lend no more countenance or toleration to abuses which demoralize the administration of the Government, while they diminish the public revenue, than would Mr. STEWART himself. He is a politician of strong and earnest convictions, always maintained with frankness and courage, and will not, we imagine, ignore party considerations in the administration of the Treasury Department. Though not as open an opponent of the principle of Protection, as is Mr. STEWART, he is by no means so zealous a friend of that doctrine as many of its supporters desire.

Governor FISH will make an able, dignified, effective and popular Secretary of State, and will conduct our foreign relations without ostentation, but with firmness and practical good sense. His political experience, which has been extensive, will be of service to the Administration, to which his moderation of temper and avoidance of extremes, in action and in sentiment, will prove an additional recommendation. The change in the War Department is rather in name than in principle or policy. General RAWLINGS is an officer of the army, and is also a man of marked intellectual ability, of great executive talent, and thoroughly familiar with the current of public affairs.

The Cabinet is stronger in many ways than it was at first; and its completion, so promptly effected in the midst of the rather remarkable difficulties it encountered at the outset, augurs well for the efficiency and success of the new Administration.

The Tenure-of-Office Law and the President.

From the World.

Here is the TIMES' reasoning with regard to the law of 1789 and Mr. STEWART: "The law in itself is a good one, and there is no good reason why it should not keep its place on the statute book. All that is wanted is that Mr. Stewart be exempted from its operation." Now that Mr. STEWART is out of the way, why does not the TIMES apply precisely the same reasoning to the Tenure-of-Office act as it affects General GRANT: that the law is a good one which ought to keep its place on the statute book, only General Grant should be exempted from its operation?

Because the two cases are not in the least alike. The Tenure-of-Office law is not a good one,—and there are many very good reasons why it should not "keep its place on the statute book." It impairs the constitutional power, and destroys the just responsibility, of the Executive. It gives the Senate a degree of control over the execution of the laws which it was never designed to have. It puts a power which, to be worth anything, must be exercised with the vigor, decision and energy of a single will, into the hands of a large body, whose action must of necessity be slow, cannot possibly be based on accurate knowledge, and will inevitably be controlled by political and party influences quite incompatible with the ends it was intended to serve. Its direct effect is to render removal from office impossible, as a remedy for inefficiency and incapacity,—and gives the men who may at any time get possession of office, a tenure of office, wholly inconsistent with both theory and previous practice under our form of government.

For these as well as many other reasons, the Tenure-of-Office law is a bad law, and ought to be repealed. From the nature of its provisions it would be tolerable only under an extraordinary state of things,—such as existed when it was passed. It was enacted, not so much for the purpose of giving the Senate control over removals from office, as for the purpose of taking that control away from Mr. JOHNSON; and when for that object it was no longer needed, the law should have been repealed. It would have been much better if in the original law its operation and existence had been limited to the 4th of March, 1869; but as that was not done, the only thing left is to repeal it as speedily after that date as possible.

The Senate evidently does not intend to do anything of the sort. It treats the bill as one designed, not so much to define the tenure of office for others, as to extend and enlarge the tenure of power for itself. Mr. EDMUNDS speaks of the bill to repeal it as a proposition for the Senate to "divest itself of one of its great constitutional powers." Mr. HOWARD, like many other Senators, "does not feel willing to surrender this great, constitutional, conservative power of the Senate." And so the bill, to repeal the law, instead of being passed, was referred to the Judiciary Committee for consideration, which probably means delay and defeat.

As a matter of historical fact, the power over removals from office has never been regarded as among the "constitutional powers of the Senate." The Constitution, in terms, requires the consent of the Senate to make valid the President's appointments to office, but it is silent in regard to his removals from office. Naturally, therefore, the matter has been, from the beginning of the Government, one of doubt and controversy. But never, until the enactment of the Tenure-of-Office law, two years ago, has either Congress, or the Supreme Court, or any other high authority, required the Senate's consent to the validity of the President's removals. The current of action, and the weight of opinion, have been uniformly the other way. It received its most elaborate discussion, in the first Congress, in 1789, and the result then reached has fixed the practice of the Government and commanded the assent of the country from that day to this. With the single exception of Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, who contended that all administrative offices were held by the tenure of good behavior, it was universally conceded that there must exist somewhere in the Government a prompt and summary power of removing incompetent, unfit or inefficient officers, for causes short of official misbehavior in the legal sense. The Executive power is in terms vested in the President alone, except where qualified by some positive limitation. In the case of appointments to office, this power is thus expressly qualified by requiring the advice and consent of the Senate; but in regard to removals, inasmuch as there is no such qualification, the general executive power of the President is not subject to any such restriction. And the necessity of having it thus vested in him was shown by Mr. MADISON, who said:

"The general principle established by the Constitution is the unity and responsibility of the Executive power in the hands of the President. It is, moreover, expressly made his duty to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. But how could such a duty be required at the hands of the Executive Magistrate, if the officer when once appointed, is to depend for his official existence, not upon him but upon a distinct body? I can hardly bring myself to imagine that the wisdom of the Convention who framed the Constitution contemplated such an incongruity."

These views of MADISON were seconded by the leading members of Congress and were reaffirmed in the House by the strong vote of 30 to 18, though the Senate, partly in consequence of the absence of members and partly from the natural desire of that body to share the Executive power, was more closely divided, and at first it was decided only by the casting vote of the Vice-President, that the power of removal belonged to the President alone.

But it is a great mistake to assume, as Senators EDMUNDS and HOWARD have done, that the power to control removals is among the "constitutional powers of the Senate." It has never been recognized as belonging to that body, nor has it ever been conferred upon it, except by the Tenure-of-Office bill passed in 1867, as a specific preventive of the anticipated abuse of the power by President JOHNSON.

As things stand now President GRANT is unable to make a single change in his own Cabinet which he has just appointed, or to remove a single subordinate officer in the whole country, without the advice and consent of the Senate. The first section of the law declares that the several heads of departments shall "hold their offices respectively for and during the term of the President by whom they may have been appointed and for one month thereafter, subject to removal by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;" and the second section forbids the removal of any officer, or even his suspension from office, unless the Senate shall consent thereto.

This is in no sense "a good law," nor is any public interest to be promoted by its continuance on the statute book. We admit that the tenure by which Government appointees now hold office is unsatisfactory. But the matter is not made better, but worse, by requiring the coöperation of the Senate to their removal. The Senate, from its numbers, its constitution and the influences by which it is sure to be controlled, is not fitted to control the power of removal from office. And the present condition of the public service renders it in the highest degree important that the President should be free to exercise that power in full accordance with his own judgment of what the public good requires.

The New Secretary of State.

The selection of HAMILTON FISH to be Secretary of State will give general satisfaction to the country, and be especially gratifying to those who know his peculiar fitness for the place. He has been Lieutenant-Governor and Governor of this State, and has been one of its Senators in the Congress of the United States for one term. He filled all these positions with ability, sound judgment and success. He is a gentleman of large wealth, of cultivated and refined tastes, and, though for the last few years retired from public life, is thoroughly familiar with the whole course of public events both at home and abroad. Though conservative by habit and conviction, he sympathizes fully with the liberal and progressive spirit of the day, and without being in the least rash or reckless in his political sentiments, he will coöperate heartily with the Administration in reëstablishing the prosperity of the country on the basis of equal and exact justice to all sections and to all citizens. He is a lawyer by profession, accustomed to deal with large questions of public and national interest, a man of extensive reading, and in every way admirably qualified for the delicate and difficult duties of the high position to which he has been invited.

As he has taken little active part in political affairs since his retirement from the Senate in 1857, he has not been conspicuously identified with any of the parties to the subsequent contests which have agitated the country. He was, of course, zealously and ardently enlisted in the support of the war for the suppression of the rebellion, and contributed, by every means in his power, to its vigorous and successful prosecution. When the war was over he was in favor of the measures which promised the most speedy restoration of peace and prosperity to all parts of the Union, though he did not become a partisan in support of either of the rival plans of restoration.

Governor FISH has a clear and solid judgment, habits of industry in the performance of duty, a thorough devotion to the honor and interests of the country, a calm and dispassionate temper and very attractive personal and social qualities, which commend him to the respect and confidence of all with whom he comes in contact. His administration of the Department of Foreign Relations will be wise, prudent and patriotic, conducive to the interests and acceptable to the sentiments of the whole country. We regard his appointment as eminently judicious and fortunate.

The Fullerton Trial.

The following letter, from the office of the Attorney-General, was received by District-Attorney COURTNEY yesterday:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, March 9, 1869.

S. G. Courtney, Esq., U. S. Attorney, New-York:

SIR: I inclose herewith a copy of a letter addressed to the President by E. A. ROLLINS, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, relative to the case of WILLIAM FULLERTON, A. A. BELKNAP and others, pending in your District, which has been referred by the President to this office with the following indorsement:

"The recommendations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue are approved, and will be carried into effect."

You will accordingly proceed with the trial of this cause at the earliest possible moment.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

J. HUBLEY ASHTON,
Acting Attorney-General.

The following is the inclosed note referred to above:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, March 8, 1869.

SIR: Some time since, the trial of the indictment found under the Revenue laws in New-York City against WILLIAM FULLERTON, A. A. BELKNAP and others, was suspended, as is understood, by direction of the President. The interests of the revenue service, in my judgment, require that the order for suspension should be revoked, and the trial allowed to proceed at the earliest possible moment; and I have, therefore, respectfully to request that you will direct the acting Attorney-General to give instructions accordingly.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
E. A. ROLLINS, Commissioner.

To the President.

We think the public generally will approve of this action of the authorities at Washington, as alike just to the public and to the parties concerned. How soon the trial can be had, under the instructions of the Attorney-General as given above, we are not aware. When it was arrested by the order of Attorney-General EVARTS and directed to be held over till the April term of the Court, it stood upon the calendar, where it had been put by Judge NELSON, for trial at the present term; but in consequence of the order of Mr. EVARTS the Judge before whom it was to be tried, as a matter of course removed it. Whether, now that this order has been revoked, and the trial ordered to proceed "at the earliest possible moment," it can and will be restored to its place on the calendar, and called for trial in due course, we cannot say. It seems to us that it would be highly satisfactory to the public if Justice NELSON could preside with the regular Judge, and try the case immediately,—so that the actual facts of this very remarkable transaction could be fully and clearly determined by the highest judicial authority. We take it for granted, at all events, that there will be no unnecessary delay. And we also take it for granted that Mr. COURTNEY, who has had so severe a struggle to get the case tried at all, and who is so thoroughly familiar with all its aspects, will be allowed to conduct it to its close. That privilege, at least, he seems to have earned by his vigorous and successful efforts to prevent its dismissal.

The New Secretary of the Treasury and His Financial Views.

As the organizer of the Internal Revenue system and its first administrator, Mr. BOUTWELL'S capacity for one branch of duty connected with his new office has been to some extent proved. With more recent discussions on financial topics he has not been prominently identified. He spoke at some length, however, in opposition to Mr. GARFIELD'S Loan bill, in March, 1866, and in January of last year introduced a resolution relating to interest on bonds; and from these appearances it is not difficult to deduce his opinions on material points connected with our financial policy.

On the subject of contraction, he holds decided opinions. He opposed it in 1866, as a measure pregnant with disaster to trade and industry, and wholly unwarranted as a means toward resumption. He resisted the proposal to invest in the Secretary, power to push forward contraction beyond the point reached in 1866. "If," he said, "the Secretary of the Treasury should reduce the non-bearing interest circulation to the amount of a hundred millions, three-fourths of the mining and manufacturing establishments in the northern portions of the country would be suspended." With this conviction, he deprecated the conferring of large discretionary authority upon the Treasury, maintaining that it would operate as a constant menace to business, the interests of which must necessarily suffer. The duty of Congress to define and limit the financial policy of the Administration, he urged as clear and urgent; and he contended that in the adoption of that course, more reliance should be placed upon the gradual effect of time and renewed prosperity, than upon the arbitrary measures of the Secretary. What the business of the country could bear, was the test by which he would try the merits of a policy; and he strenuously opposed whatever might operate adversely. He then preferred practical results to theories—defined to unlimited powers; and there is no reason to apprehend a change in his opinions.

The bill introduced by Mr. HOOPER (March 19, 1866,) received Mr. BOUTWELL'S emphatic indorsement, one of its provisions being "that the public debt shall not hereafter be increased by authority of this or any previous acts of Congress." A similar provision is embodied in Mr. HOOPER'S measure of last session, which the hostility of Senator SHERMAN for the time killed. We conclude, then, that the wholesome prohibition of any increase of the gold-bearing debt, which is hoped for as a means of strengthening the public credit, will receive the support of the new Secretary.

The nearest approach to any actual plan on the part of Mr. BOUTWELL is the resolution he offered (Jan. 27, 1868,) instructing the Committee of Ways and Means to inquire into the expediency of providing by law as follows:

"For notice, by the Secretary of the Treasury, when the United States coin in the Treasury exceeds twenty millions that he will anticipate payment of the interest first falling due on bonds—such payment to be subject to a rebate of interest at the rate specified in the bonds. For a new loan of $400,000,000 at six per cent., the principal and interest payable in coin; the loan to be confined to citizens of the United States and not to be transferable or payable to any others, and the bonds to be liable to State and local taxation; the bonds to be payable, fifty millions on the 1st of January, and fifty millions on each succeeding 1st of January. For a new loan, $4,000,000,000 of four and a half per cent., principal and interest payable in coin, and which may be made payable either at Frankfort or London; the bonds to be payable, fifty millions on the 1st of January, 1900, and to be untaxable, either by the United States or any State or municipality; that the shareholders of five-twenty bonds may exchange their bonds for the bonds of either of these classes, and that the Secretary of the Treasury be prohibited from making sales of gold."

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be prohibited from making sales of gold," is a proposition as pertinent at this moment as it was a year ago. The resolution, however, shows his reliance upon some funding process as a method of lessening the public burdens; his condemnation of contraction being a guarantee against the embarrassment and ruin which would attend the enactment of the Sherman scheme.

On all these points Mr. BOUTWELL'S recorded views harmonize with the ideas suggested in the President's inaugural. In the division upon Mr. SCHENCK'S bill, (Feb. 24,) as furnished to the newspapers, his name does not appear. But the whole tenor of his speeches indicates a scrupulous regard for the maintenance untarnished of the national faith, and his resolution of January, 1868, is more than a presumptive recognition of the principle affirmed by the late Congress. So far as it is proper to infer a policy from Mr. BOUTWELL'S past course, we may assume that he will preserve inviolate the rights of the public creditor, without forgetting the care and consideration which are due to the interests of the country.

The New Secretary of War.

The change from General SCHOFIELD to General RAWLINGS as Chief of the War Bureau, might almost be pronounced a mere change in name; it is certainly a change of persons, rather than of principle or policy—the substitution of an "army man" for another, in the administration of a Department where nearly all army men think alike. General RAWLINGS needs no more introduction to the country in order to inspire confidence than does General GRANT himself. He already enjoys that confidence; and considering his high character as a soldier and a man, his energy, ability, courage, industry, spotless integrity—all well known to the country for so many years—we may pronounce this to be a strong selection. General RAWLINGS came into public notice simultaneously with his illustrious superior, their fames have been ever since inseparably linked, and his appearance in General GRANT'S Cabinet is a fresh pledge of the harmony of action which bids fair to reign there. Our best word for General RAWLINGS is to say that he is thoroughly worthy of his seat in a body where the first qualification is character, and character of the highest stamp.

By education and instincts a civilian, yet absorbing from his rare military experience and his eight years' associations the traditional views of army affairs taught by long experience, General RAWLINGS will bring qualifications both of temperament and education to the War Bureau such as are not often to be secured. Though far removed from being a politician, he has yet a thorough knowledge of public affairs. Before the war a Douglas Democrat of the "straightest" type, he has since become a firm Republican. In his duties as soldier he has never forgotten his duties as patriot; his strong and sympathetic nature is happily guided by a well-balanced judgment. For the rest, his executive ability is too well known to require allusion; and his past record in the country's history is at once his best indorsement, and the best augury of his future.

Our Foreign Relations.

The President yesterday exchanged views with the representatives of foreign Powers, including the State of Georgia. Nothing very important, as indications of future events, was said on either side. The President assured the Ministers from foreign nations that no proper effort should be spared on his part to secure relations of peace and friendship with all of them,—and expressed his pleasure at their concurrence in such a purpose. This does not look like immediate war with England on account of the Alabama claims, or with France because her troops went to Mexico, or with Turkey because she holds on to Crete, or with the rest of the world to "keep our hand in." So far, so good.

The Representatives of Georgia were assured of his strong desire that "peace and order" should prevail throughout the South, and that all citizens should enjoy perfect freedom of opinion and of speech. The President also expressed his satisfaction that the Legislature of Georgia was in favor of settling the suffrage question by ratifying the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution, and by imposing upon the Yankees what the Yankees had imposed upon them,—negro suffrage. Without entering argumentatively into the merits of the question, the President seemed to think that this would be an easy, and not an unfair, mode of disposing of this vexed question.

Senator Hale's Report on Legislative Corruption.

In other columns we give place this morning to Senator HALE'S report on the alleged corruptions at Albany in connection with the railroad legislation of last Winter. Our readers will observe that while the report brings to light the startling fact that the sum of $500,000 was surreptitiously withdrawn from the treasury of the Erie Railroad and expended, in sums varying from $2,000 to $100,000, for the purpose of influencing legislation, none of this money could be traced to the pockets of any member of either House. It would be pleasant, could we infer from this amiable report the stern incorruptibility of our Albany legislators; but the uncharitable public will be likely to take a different view of the matter.

Senator HALE'S report closes with the recommendation of a change in the law respecting bribery, which we have repeatedly urged upon the Legislature. As the law now stands, the giver of a bribe is subject to punishment as well the member who accepts one. Senator HALE recommends that a change be made so that the giver of a bribe which is accepted shall be exempt from prosecution; and he very properly observes that "the guilt of the party who, by accepting a bribe, betrays a public trust and violates his official oath, is (if there can be any degrees in guilt of this kind) greater than that of him who gives it," and that "the Legislature owes it to its own reputation and dignity to adopt such measures as are best adapted to remove every obstacle that now exists to a full and thorough investigation as to the conduct of any of its members."

The Indignant Land-sharks and the Times Exposure.

The "land-sharks," who prey upon the sailors in our port, yesterday held an indignation meeting to protest against the exposure of their practices, lately published in the TIMES. Of course they represented themselves as the friends of the seamen, who went out of their way to welcome and clothe and feed them, and even to give them hot baths. They claim also to have originated the strike, by which the sailors lately obtained an advance in their wages. We admit that much, but we must add that as long as the boarding-masters led that strike it met with no sympathy from the public, received no hearing from the shipping merchants and was characterized by very riotous incidents. The sailors themselves repudiated them, as our columns will show, and the strike was as much for relief from the oppression of the "land-sharks" as for higher wages.

We have no doubt of the truth of all our reporter stated; the horrible picture which he presented was not, we are satisfied, overdrawn. Late official reports from our Consul at London, alluding to the foul practices of shipping and boarding masters in this port as well as in London, fully corroborate all we have published. One of the most liberal and extensive charities in this City is devoted to guarding, as far as possible, the seamen from these very men, and boarding-houses are maintained by it for the purpose of affording them good board and safety from robbery. Among the most important duties of foreign Consuls in our ports, and our Consuls in foreign ports, is the protection of seamen from the rapacity of these men. There is now in circulation in almost every port in the country a petition to Congress asking the adoption of a shipping act like that of England, having for its chief object the abolition of the power of these very men. It is one we have frequently urged on the attention of Congress, and one we do not doubt it will sooner or later adopt, in justice to a very unprotected class of industrious men, and in justice also to another very rapacious set of idlers and criminals.

MINOR TOPICS.

President GRANT'S nomination of the Ex-Confederate General LONGSTREET (one of LEE'S most prominent officers through the war) as Surveyor of the Port of New-Orleans, is a significant step. At the close of hostilities, General LONGSTREET "accepted the situation," and accepted all the results of the war unreservedly. He supported the Reconstruction acts of Congress, the Civil Rights bill, the Fourteenth Amendment, the Republican policy and General GRANT. He was relieved of his disabilities by special act of Congress, and his nomination to office, if confirmed by the Senate, will mark a new point in the reconstruction of the Union.

The correspondence between Mr. WASHBURNE and President GRANT on the resignation of the former of the office of Secretary of State, is eminently honorable to both. Mr. WASHBURNE expresses, in warm terms, his grateful acknowledgements for the honor done him in the appointment, and General GRANT enhances that honor by a frank declaration of the reasons of personal gratitude and friendship which had led him to give it. Mr. WASHBURNE retires from the place because his health is not equal to the labors it demands.

The appointment of Mr. BOUTWELL to the Treasury was well received in financial circles yesterday. On all questions of finance, his record is sound; and it is an important fact that he enters on the administration of the most important department of the Government with the full confidence of both Houses of Congress.

Among other advantages of an International Copyright law, it would prevent such profitless and wasteful rivalries among publishers as we now witness over certain popular books. Three American publishing firms—one in this City, one in Boston, and one in Philadelphia—are at this time issuing separate editions of the works of CHARLES READE. Two firms are issuing DILKE'S book; two firms are issuing Sir SAMUEL BAKER'S last book; three firms are issuing TROLLOPE'S last novel; and we notice many other books of which different editions are published by two or three different publishing houses. In all this, there is great waste, which would be prevented by a Copyright law.

The furious doings of Ex-Solicitor BINCKLEY in Washington yesterday constitute the latest sensation at the capital. The first reports were that he had beaten Ex-Commissioner ROLLINS almost to death; but it seems that Mr. ROLLINS escaped the assault of BINCKLEY, who then fell upon Deputy Commissioner HARLAND. BINCKLEY'S rage at ROLLINS was caused by the letter of Mr. ROLLINS to the President demanding his dismissal from office. The Commissioner pronounced the Solicitor to be "either a willful perjuror or the tool of corrupt and malicious men," and said that his employment was "a farce." BINCKLEY must be locked up for this disgraceful assault,—though he escaped punishment for his attack on the District-Attorney at the Astor House, in this City, last year.

The land-shark who robbed a sailor of $30 a few days ago, was, yesterday, sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for twelve years and six months. Judge BEDFORD, in pronouncing sentence, said that the prisoner belonged to a class of land-sharks that lounge about the docks for the purpose of robbing sailors, and he proposed to make an example of him as a warning to all others engaged in like crimes. The land-sharks had better take warning. They have prayed on the sailors long enough.

In the Assembly at Albany yesterday, a report and testimony were submitted from the Select Committee appointed to investigate the charges of improper influence in reference to legislation regarding railroads last Winter. As a preventive of attempts on the virtue of the Legislature, the report recommended the adoption of the law against bribery and corruption recently drawn up by Mr. HALE. We have not much hope of the enactment of Mr. HALE'S bill; but we are confident its passage would do a great deal toward stopping the corrupt practices which have heretofore disgraced the Legislature.

JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE, once Vice-President of the United States, and afterward prominent among the Generals of the rebellion, has availed himself of JOHNSON'S amnesty and returned to his home in Kentucky. His reception was cordial and somewhat demonstrative. His manner was quiet and unobtrusive, as that of one thoroughly chastened in spirit and subdued in temper by the disasters of the war of which he has had so large a personal experience. He comes home without personal ambition or aspirations, and without any more of the political excitement of his past years, as he says himself, than if he were "an extinct volcano." He says little of his plans for the future, except that he wishes nothing to do with politics, and intends to devote himself to the repair of his shattered fortune. He has always been popular in his own State, and will find a cordial welcome among his old personal friends. We trust he will adhere to his present purpose and eschew politics; his own wishes and those of the whole country will concur on that point.

Ten thousand dollars were appropriated by the last Congress to procure a survey of the site which has been deeded to the United States for naval purposes on the Thames River, near New-London, Conn., and for the repair of the wharf at that point. In view of the improvements at Hell Gate, it will be necessary to add to our coast and harbor defences in Long Island Sound, and we are glad that a beginning is to be made at this important point. The Thames River possesses all the natural advantages required for a naval station. There is a mile of wharf frontage, a good anchorage ground, and a depth of five or six fathoms of water. Naval vessels might safely be laid up there in ordinary; and in this manner the Brooklyn Navy-yard would be relieved of much of the risk by fire to which it is now exposed in consequence of its crowded state.

It has puzzled shipowners very much to discover the reason why their vessels this season have been able to carry several hundred more bales of cotton than could be formerly stowed on board. It is now ascertained that the bales on coming from the plantations, run from four to five per cent. less in weight of cotton than they did last year, although the gross weight has been about the same as usual. The difference is accounted for by the heavier quality of the bagging and roping which are used in making up the bales. It is thought probable that this scheme of the planters, which yields them a profit of about fifty or sixty cents per bale—the difference between the price of the cotton and the material which envelopes it—will reduce the estimated aggregate weight of the crop at least 100,000 bales. This sharp practice is borrowed from some of the hay dealers who were wont to conceal a hickory log or a stone in each of their bundles.

Landing of an American Fillibustering Expedition—The Peruvian Monitors at St. Thomas.

HAVANA, Thursday, March 11.

It appears that an expedition from the United States, Nassau or Inagua, has landed on the Cuban coast. The Captain of a Spanish vessel, which arrived here to-day, reports that on Sunday last, while east of Punta-Mulas, he saw a fleet consisting of one side-wheel steamer, bark-rigged, and three other steamers, schooner-rigged, steering northeast. Shortly afterward he passed a side-wheel steamer, bark-rigged, which was anchored two miles from Guincho Keys. The report has been in circulation for some time past in Cuban circles that an expedition was under way to these shores, bringing cannon, arms, ammunition and recruits for the insurgents.

The Peruvian monitors and their convoys by this time have undoubtedly arrived at St. Thomas. The Spanish war steamer, which has been watching them, followed them until they had passed the Cuban coast, and returned to this harbor to-day.

A committee of the conservative citizens of Matanzas have been organizing bands of volunteers, who are sent out daily in all directions to scour the country. Other towns seem disposed to follow the example of Matanzas.

The news from the jurisdiction of Cienfuegos is favorable to the Government.

The Governor of Sagua la Grânde, having received reinforcements from Villa Clara, has marched with all his available forces against the insurgents, who have, for some time past, made their headquarters on the San José plantation.

In the Eastern Department the Government troops are very active. Columns have left Santiago and Bayamo to attack the main force of the insurgents at Mayari.

In the Central Department the Government is strengthening the garrison. A battalion 250 strong has arrived at Colonia de St. Domingo.

The vessels which are to convey the political prisoners to Fernando Po will sail on Sunday next. They will be accompanied by the Spanish man-of-war Torqua. Among the prisoners to be transported are Señor CASTELLO, the Bank President; Señor EMBIL, a planter, and Señor REGNELME, a merchant, all well-known men in high standing in the community.

The Government Censor has notified the Havana journals that they will hereafter be permitted to publish only the official accounts of engagements, giving as a reason that other statements tend to mislead the public mind.

Great Reduction in the Army Estimates—Subscriptions for Fenian Convicts.

LONDON, Thursday, March 11.

In the House of Commons this evening, Mr. CARDWELL, Secretary of War, made a statement in regard to the army estimate, showing a reduction of £1,000,000 in the total amount as compared with last year. He said that the Government proposed to partially accomplish this saving by reducing the forces in the colonies, except at military stations.

DUBLIN, Thursday, March 11.

The Amnesty Committee, of this city, has started a subscription to raise funds for the benefit of the Fenian convicts who are discharged from imprisonment by the Government.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The Coolie Trade Claimed to be Sanctioned by Law.

SAN FRANCISCO, Thursday, March 11.

Advices from the Sandwich Islands to Feb. 20 have been received. Honolulu papers, in discussing the Coolie trade, say it is authorized by an act of the Legislature of June last.

The Board of Immigration had dispatched a vessel to the Polynesian Islands for a cargo of natives. The missionary authorities were prohibited from sending letters and papers by the vessel, which created a great deal of ill feeling. The movement failed to meet the approbation of the United States Minister, and it was expected that the Government of the United States would interfere and prevent the forced importation of natives of the neighboring islands.

The commercial news is unimportant.

The United States steamer Ossipee was at Honolulu.

The whaleship Elizabeth Swift, from New-Bedford, had arrived at Hilo.

A Steamboat Sunk in the Red River—The Sugar Interest of Louisiana.

NEW-ORLEANS, Thursday March 11.

The steamboat Cuba No. 2 sunk in the Red River, between Jefferson and Shreveport, on the 9th inst., with 580 bales of cotton on board. The boat is a total loss. A portion of the cargo was saved. No lives were lost.

A meeting of the parties interested is called at the Chamber of Commerce for to-morrow night, to take the necessary steps to commence the sale of cotton for gold.

The Committee of the Chamber of Commerce to which was submitted a memorial and petition to Congress, from the Philadelphia sugar refiners, asking an increase of duties on sugar, reported that the present condition of the sugar refining interest does not seem to require Congressional aid; that the sugar-planting interest of the South appears prosperous enough under the present tariff to rend[illegible] addition[illegible]uty unnecessary; that the general sentiment of the people is unfavorable to higher duties, therefore they cannot petition Congress for higher duties on any grade of sugar.

The report was in the form of a resolution.

EX-PRESIDENT JOHNSON.

His Reception in Baltimore—The Procession—Festivities and Speeches in the Evening.

BALTIMORE, Md., Thursday, March 11.

Ex-President JOHNSON arrived in this city, as its guest, on a special train, at about 11 o'clock A. M. The Committee of Invitation, on the part of the Common Council, accompanied him from Washington, and the other members of the Council met him at Annapolis Junction. On arriving at Camden Station he was met by Governor BOWIE and other State officials, and Mayor BANKS and a number of city officers. The procession had already formed on Eutaw-street, and the line of march was soon taken up. A squadron of cavalry headed the procession, followed by the Fifth Regiment of the Maryland National Guard with full ranks. Following the regiment was an open carriage containing Ex-President JOHNSON, Governor BOWIE and Mayor BANKS. Next followed the Third Regiment Maryland National Guard Zouaves, and the carriages containing distinguished guests and city authorities. Among the former were Hon. GARRETT DAVIS, Senator from Kentucky; Mr. GOLLADAY, member of Congress from Kentucky; Mr. ELDRIDGE, member of Congress from Wisconsin; Mr. ARCHER, member of Congress from Maryland, and others. The Fire Department, with seven steamers and hook and ladder companies, in strong force, followed by the Police force. All along the line of march, through Eutaw, Monument, Eager, Aisquith, Baltimore and Gay streets to the Exchange, dense crowds filled the sidewalks, and the windows and balconies of the buildings were crowded with ladies. The welcome was cordial. The day has been bright and bracing. Mr. JOHNSON is now holding a reception at the Exchange, and thousands are calling on him.

The reception of Ex-President JOHNSON at the Exchange ended at 3 o'clock, when he was escorted to Barnum's Hotel.

During the afternoon the Fire Department made a fine display and trial of their engines in front of the hotel, on Monument-square.

Dinner was served at 8:30 o'clock. Mr. JOHNSON took his seat, with Mayor BANKS on his right and Governor BOWIE on his left.

About two hundred persons were seated, among whom were Ex-Secretary Browning, Hons. Garret Davis, Golladay and Trimble, of Kentucky; Eldridge, of Wisconsin; Randall, of Pennsylvania; Kerr, of Indiana; Ex-Governor Swann and Hon. Stevenson Archer, of Maryland, and others.

After prayer by Rev. Dr. MCCRAW, dinner was partaken of, the band in the meanwhile discoursing music. The cloth having been removed, the first toast was read as follows:

"Our Guest!—The patriot statesman, ANDREW JOHNSON. As President of the United States, the bulwark of equal rights, the champion of the only true and permanent Union of these States, and the defender and martyr of the Constitution, history will vindicate his fame and record an impeachment of his impeachers, and a verdict of 'guilty' as to them, by the votes of future generations of American freemen. Baltimore, standing at the gate of the capital in front of the grand procession advancing to meet and welcome an illustrious citizen in the name of that long line of admiring thousands who await his coming, bids him welcome to a place in the hearts of a great people, for whose protection and happiness he bared his breast to the storm of calumny and for their sake hazarded all that is dear to the man and the citizen. In his retirement from the seat of the National Government in the full vigor of his manly faculties, stimulated by the applause of all good citizens, we look with great assurance to his future efforts and influence for the liberation of the captive States of the Union and the rescue of their now true and faithful citizens from political slavery. May his life and destiny ever be radiant in the list of the long-lived American patriots, with the blessings of the lovers of the Constitution and Union which have been the glory of American citizens."

The toast was received with much applause, when Mr. JOHNSON responded.

MR. JOHNSON'S SPEECH.

GENTLEMEN: In rising after the resolution has been read and sentiments thereon expressed, it is not for the purpose of making an address, but simply to return my thanks for the compliment. I have no speech to make relative to public affairs but what has been already expressed, and in rising now it is only to tender my thanks. I am free to say that during the last four years in the arduous struggle going on for constitutional liberty, in its darkest hour the confidence and encouragement of the State of Maryland have been an encouragement peculiarly sustaining in its character; for when the crisis arrived Maryland seemed to be always standing for the Constitution and the Union. I repeat, my only purpose in rising is to tender thanks, but I will say, in retiring from the most exalted position in the gift of a free people, and resuming the position of a citizen, I feel more honored than I would to-morrow in being President. I feel more pride in being an American citizen to-night than I would in being inaugurated President over the ruins of a violated Constitution. Yes, my deliverance is the greatest case of emancipation since the rebellion. I stand a free man, and would rather be a free man than President and be a slave. The speech you have made me to-day and to-night shall be treasured up as long as one pulsation shall be sent from my heart, and carried with me. Accept my thanks, not as simple utterances, but as the expressions of a heart overwhelming with thanks for the kind reception you have given me."

The second regular toast was then given:

"The President of the United States."

The toast was warmly applauded, and drank standing.

Hon. ISAAC S. JONES, Attorney-General of Maryland, responded.

The third toast:

"The State of Maryland—The land of religious and political liberty. May her star ever shine brightly in our national constellation."

Responded to by Governor BOWIE.

A number of other toasts were given and responded to in an eloquent and patriotic manner. Mr. JOHNSON retired at 12 o'clock. The entertainment closed amid much enthusiasm.

The Georgia Legislature and the Suffrage Amendment.

ATLANTA, Ga., Thursday, March 11.

The House passed the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution to-day by a vote of ayes 74, nays 69. The members who opposed its adoption argued that the amendment destroyed rights exercised by the States since the foundation of the Government; that it was an admission by the people, North and South, that they have no power to determine the right of suffrage; that it is a concession by Congress that its reconstruction measures are unconstitutional; that it invests Congress with the right to impose suffrage on all men in the States, irrespective of race or color; that the fundamental principle of democracy is that negro suffrage is wrong, not from any ill-will toward the negro, but because the Democratic Party is a white man's party; that Governor BULLOCK belongs to the class who desire the elevation of the negro above the white, for by that means alone can power be secured.

Prevalence of the Hog Cholera in Buffalo.

BUFFALO, Thursday, March 11.

The Inspector of the East Buffalo Cattle-yards reports that 600 head of hogs arrived here on Sunday last from Illinois; that 200 were sold of the lot, and on Monday sent East. Afterward it was ascertained that forty of the balance died from cholera, and in all about one hundred have died. On Tuesday the remaining 300 were shipped East on the Erie Road. We understand the authorities here would not allow the hogs to be slaughtered in this city, as the owner desired, unless they were afterward consigned to the bone-yard. This is the first case of hog cholera in the city for two years.

EUROPEAN NEWS BY MAIL.

The advices thus received are later by three days than those already at hand. Captain HAACK, of the Cimbria, and Captain DUCHESNE, of the Pereire, will accept our thanks for French and German papers.

In the House of Commons, Feb. 25, Mr. MCTORRENS asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether any authentic information had been received of the rejection by the Senate of the United States of the Convention regarding the Alabama claims; and whether he could inform the House that the protocol regarding mutual rights of naturalization had been accepted. Mr. OTWAY said no authentic information had been received at the Foreign Office of the rejection by the Senate of the United States of the Convention relating to the Alabama claims. He could not say whether the protocol regarding naturalization had been accepted, but the report of the Commission on the subject had been laid upon the table.

TRAGEDY AT SEA.

Particulars of the Loss of the Austrian Frigate Radetzky—Three Hundred Men Perish.

Vienna (Feb. 22) Correspondence of the Morning Post.

The first news of this catastrophe was received here by the naval section of the War Ministry by a telegram from the commander of the island and fortress of Lissa, in which it was stated that the optic telegraph stationed at Fort Wellington had signaled the information that, at a distance of about ten miles to the northeast of the island, an Austrian frigate was blown up. The commander of the island instantly telegraphed to the vessels stationed at Trieste and Zara, and to the commander of the squadron at Gravosa, to proceed at once to the scene of the accident; and the iron-clad frigate Ferdinand Max, as well as the gunboat Hum and the steamer Andreas Hofer, were immediately dispatched to Lissa with orders to render any assistance that was necessary and possible under the circumstances.

A deputation of the corporation of Lissa also set out to the place where the accident had occurred, and on their return yesterday they telegraphed that of the whole crew and marines on board, numbering in all 364 men, besides the Captain, only twenty-three had been able to save themselves by swimming.

The Radetzky was under sail, on a cruise for gun practice, and had no steam up, so that the accident could not have been caused by the explosion of the boiler or a cylinder.

According to the meagre authentic reports which have reached the War Office and the newspapers, wet cartridges were being dried in the powder-room. The ammunition had been unpacked, and quantities of powder were lying about on the floor, and the workmen were consequently commanded to enter the room only in felt slippers. They, however, came in with their boots on, without putting felt slippers over them. The powder coming in contact with the hard soles of the boots, ignited from the friction caused thereby, and a terrific explosion sent vessel and 340 men to destruction.

A telegram from the commander of Lissa to the naval section of the War Office, dated yesterday evening, gives the following additional details: The explosion took place in the powder-room abaft while the metal was being cleaned. Cadet BARTH was near the powder-room when the explosion took place, by which he was hurled into the sea. Quartermaster KRAUS reported that he was in the corridor superintending the process of cleaning. After 10 o'clock he laid himself down in the corridor near the foremast. He was roused from his sleep by a violent shock and the cry of "Fire!" He rushed to the hatchway, but the steps were blown away, and he had to creep into the battery, when he saw the destruction of the hind part of the ship, which was on the point of sinking. The water was rushing in from all sides, and he had just time to throw himself into the sea through the port-hole. KRAUS is of opinion that Quartermaster DOGEK, by incautiously striking a light, had caused the explosion in the powder-room, where the ammunition had been unpacked and cartridges spread out to dry.

ENGLAND AND AMERICA

Hon. Reverdy Johnson's Latest Speeches on the Relations of the Two Countries.

On Feb. 25, Hon. REVERDY JOHNSON visited Manchester and met the members of the City Council and of the Chamber of Commerce of that city. An address and reply were read, and Mr. JOHNSON afterward spoke.

REMARKS OF THE AMERICAN MINISTER.

After having referred to the then existing condition of the Alabama difficulty, he said: Two or three subjects of dispute may be considered as actually settled. One of them, the question whether native allegiance was perpetual, a doctrine supported by your Courts from the beginning of your Government down to the hour when the recent convention was made, was so contrary, as we supposed, to what should be the true doctrine upon the subject, and so inconsistent with the duties which, under the Constitution of my country, we owe to the naturalized citizen, that we felt especially anxious that that should be settled, and I was directed to devote myself in the first instance to bring about that result. That has been done to the entire satisfaction of all departments of my Government as well as to the satisfaction of your Government. * * * In relation to the other cause of controversy, this is not the occasion, and I should not be discharging my own duty, as I think, if I were to discuss in your presence the obligations which your Government is under to ours to make amends by granting an indemnity for the wrongs which we suppose were perpetrated upon our commerce through the fitting of the Alabama and the other vessels from your ports, manned for the most part by Englishmen, and armed through the instrumentality of English artisans and English capital. Whether you are responsible or not is a question which we are willing to have solved by some friendly arbitration, for war on our part, or on your part, in order to settle that question, would be an act of absolute insanity, to say nothing of the outrage which would be perpetrated upon humanity and Christian civilization. And I think, as I have had occasion more than once to say, that you are more interested in such a settlement of that cause of the dispute than we are. To us, as a nation, the payment of a few millions of dollars is comparatively nothing; but to you, who may be involved in a war in spite of yourselves with some of the nations of continental Europe, the principle that a neutral nation can suffer vessels of war to be built within her own limits and given to the aid of a belligerent is a matter of vast importance. How did our commerce suffer through the career of the Alabama and the other vessels, and how completely was it driven from the ocean! Where the vessels were not captured and burned, as they were to a great extent, those which got into a safe harbor dared not come out again; and what our shipowners were compelled to do was to sell their vessels and place them for the most part under your flag to secure protection. Now, what could your maritime force—of which you have just cause to be proud, and to which for years and centuries your reputation and standing in the world has so much to be referred—do for the protection of your commercial marine if there were fitted out in the United States steamers like the Alabama, constructed to run some fourteen knots an hour, to prey upon your commerce? It would share the fate of ours during the late war. It would be burned if captured, and your merchants would be afraid to send out their fleets to run the hazard of capture. Your commerce driven from the ocean—still worse, your commerce on the ocean destroyed—the sufferings of Manchester during our late civil war would be comparatively as nothing when contrasted with the sufferings you would undergo in such a case as that. * * * * * * *

I hope the day will come, and I trust it will soon come, when, listening to the spirit of our age—enlightened civilization—and, above all, looking to the interests of all peoples, to the happiness and security of individual men upon the ocean—they will agree to adopt it as one of the laws of nations, that private property upon the ocean, during war, shall never be subject to capture. That done, men may be killed upon the land and upon the ocean in battle, but the merchant will go his own way unharmed, and will return with the fruits of his enterprise to mitigate the sufferings which would otherwise be the condition of his countrymen. Another effort would be to remove what I fear has been in former times, one of the inducements to war. The capture of private property upon the ocean is a tempting bait. Millions and millions, when a war occurs between two such nations as yours and my own, or, indeed, between any other nation and your own—millions of property are afloat. What an incitement to plunder! How greedy—not for the gratification of a noble ambition, but for the purpose of filling their individual exchequers—how greedy will men be for a chance to go upon the ocean and get rich by appropriating to themselves the property of others. A few gentlemen—it may be so with you, and it may be so with us—a few men, active, enterprising and intelligent, may bring about a state of feeling in either country which will influence the conduct of its administration, and induce them to rush into a war, when, but for such inducement, a war would not have been thought of. With a few concluding words of repeated thanks, Mr. JOHNSON resumed his seat.

The proceedings then terminated.

In the evening Mr. JOHNSON was entertained at dinner in the Town-hall by the Mayor and Corporation of the city. The Mayor (Mr. GRAVES) presided.

Mr. JOHNSON, in responding to the toast of his health, said, when he returned home, which he did not expect to do until all our difficulties were settled, he should remember with the most lively gratification his visit to Manchester. He asked his hearers not to be alarmed, for there was nothing in the political horizon that gave the least fear that peace would be disturbed between England and America. It had been said that the President elect was opposed to the Alabama Convention, and desirous of war. It was a base and unfounded calumny. General GRANT had seen too much of war to desire another drop of blood to be spilt. In his letter to the Convention, by which he was nominated as their candidate on the 29th of May, 1868, he said, "We want peace, and universal prosperity, its sequence;" and he closes that letter by repeating, "Let us have peace." That peace, as far as depended upon General Grant, we might be sure would be maintained. His Excellency afterward said he had pleasure in referring to the fact that the same merciful policy which was adopted by the victors in the American struggle was being to a certain extent adopted by the English Government in reference to the Fenians.

CRUELTY AT SEA.

Brutal Treatment of the Passengers of the Ship James Foster—Arrest of the Officers—Statements of the Injured.

The last of the passengers upon the James Foster, seventy-six days from Liverpool, which arrived here on Sunday, were landed yesterday morning at Castle Garden from quarantine. They were ninety-six in number, and in good health. From forty to fifty invalids were reported in the TIMES of yesterday as having been taken from the ship to Ward's Island Hospital, and fourteen are lying ill at the Seamen's Retreat at Edgewater. The boatswain, carpenter and third mate of the vessel are also at Edgewater, under arrest for brutal treatment of several emigrants and sailors. Many of the patients are debilitated from the effects of ship fever, and others are suffering severely from diarrhœa. Painful stories are told by them of the brutality of Captain ARMSTRONG and his two first officers toward the crew.

The following are the sworn statements of two of the passengers and one of the crew, who were among the maltreated:

STATEMENT OF AARON LEVI.

Aaron Levi, a native of Poland, says that he was a passenger by the ship James Foster, Jr., from Liverpool to New-York, and speaks of his treatment during the voyage as follows: I was accompanied by my two children; I did not receive a sufficiency of food—not one-half the amount the contract called for; I went to the first mate to ask for more, and he beat me with his hands; I am yet suffering from the effects of the beating I received from him; I did not get enough coal to cook my victuals; I frequently have had to throw my food overboard, as I could not cook it, having no coal allowed me; I complained to the Captain, and by him was told to "Go to —;" several times in the middle of the night I was compelled by the boatswain to go on deck to help to work the ship; I saw the first mate strike a passenger named Abraham Mayer; I also saw him strike a passenger named Hyman Gordon; he struck them with his clenched hands.

STATEMENT OF TED. WILSON.

Ted. Wilson, another passenger by the Foster, says: During the latter part of the voyage, while eating dinner in the galley, I was told to come out, and on not immediately complying, was struck by the carpenter; I was knocked against the water-tank, and very much bruised; John Wilson, now in hospital, was a witness to the assault; this was the only time I was struck by him or any one else during the voyage; they did not give the passengers enough water; the water measure was half full of pitch, so it held less; I saw the boatswain strike Joseph Coen with his hands when in the hatchway; saw the carpenter strike William Hill; he struck him in the breast with his hands; those were the only two I saw struck; three passengers died during the voyage and one was lost overboard; the provisions were insufficient; we were not allowed sufficient coal to cook our provisions.

STATEMENT OF MICHAEL GANNON.

Michael Gannon, a native of the City of Dublin, Ireland, stated that he came by the ship James Foster, Jr., from Liverpool to New-York, and makes the following statement: Was a passenger cook on said ship, and when I signed the papers I supposed it was for a passenger cook, but afterward found out it was for an ordinary seaman; I can read, but did not read the contract I signed; on the 16th December, 1868, I was struck by the carpenter for not answering his call as quickly as he wished; on this occasion he blackened my eyes and cut my face; the carpenter struck me nearly every day during the voyage for trifling things; on the 8th of February, 1869, I was knocked down, kicked in the neck and breast by the first mate; on the 16th of December, 1868, I was going to the doctor's office for treatment for the bruises I had already received from the carpenter, when the mate knocked me down with his hands; I saw John Stokes, a passenger cook, beaten by the carpenter; he beat him on the head with an iron belaying-pin; said John Stokes died about fourteen days after this; previous to his death, said Stokes told me that he would not recover from the effects of this beating; I am convinced that the beating he received from the carpenter was the cause of his death; I also saw the carpenter beat another of the passenger cooks; he took him into the coal-locker and beat him with a stick; this man died about three weeks afterward; he also told me he could not recover from the effects of the beating received from the carpenter; the salt water got mixed more or less with the fresh water in the tanks which were exposed; this was caused by the vessel shipping seas; the passengers were not allowed a sufficient quantity of coal to cook their victuals.

Other similar statements were made by passengers and crew, and the Commissioners of Emigration will investigate the matter thoroughly to-day.

WILLIAMS COLLEGE

Reunion of the Alumni at the Astor House—Speeches by Messrs. David Dudley Field, William Cullen Bryant, President Hopkins, and Others.

The annual reunion of the Alumni of Williams College was held at the Astor House last evening. The chair was taken by DAVID DUDLEY FIELD, Esq., having on the right Dr. Hopkins, President of Williams College, Dr. Irenæus Prime, Judge Nelson, of Oregon, Rev. Henry M. Field, S. F. Williams, a lineal descendant of Ephraim Williams, the founder of the college; and on the left William Cullen Bryant, E. C. Benedict, Rev. Orville Dewey, E. T. Mack, Dr. G. R. Ely, Rev. Wm. A. Halleck, Professor Whitney, of Yale, Professor Joy, Professor Conter, Dr. Peters, Dr. Bumstead, Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., Charles S. Spencer, Colonel Dwight, Colonel Betts, Professor Alonzo Clarke, &c. There were about 150 gentlemen present.

An excellent dinner was provided by Messrs. STETSON, and a fine band of music performed a selection of popular and operatic airs during the repast.

Grace was said before dinner by Rev. Dr. DEWEY, and after dinner by Rev. Dr. HALLECK.

On the removal of the cloth the Chairman rose and gave the toast of "The President of the United States," which was drunk with great applause.

The President then rose and said, in the course of a lengthy speech:

It is the preeminent distinction of Williams College that there the missionary enterprise of America was born. Five of her undergraduates, glowing with religious fervor, kindled the fire which, flashing to Heaven, has lighted the whole world. Missionaries bearing her diploma have gone into all lands. I have seen them on the shores of the Bosphorus and under the shadow of the Parthenon, on the banks of the Ilsys, and along the slopes of Lebanon. They have penetrated the farthest east and and stood in the gates of the morning, while in the opposite quarter they followed the setting sun to the regeneration of the Pacific Islands. If that could be made clear to the bodily sense which is audible to the mind, we might hear morning and evening prayers in a hundred languages for the prosperity of that institution which has given birth to the largest and most successful missions of modern times. Great as are these distinctions of our Alma Mater, they are not the only ones. In all that relates to education, to the promotion of learning and the advancement of civilization, she is not a whit behind the most advanced of her sisters. In peace she has given her children to the arts of peace, in war she has sent them to battle. In conclusion the President proposed—"Our Alma Mater Gutielmensez semper diligenda amanda atque honoeanda."

The entire speech was greeted with enthusiastic applause.

Dr. HOPKINS, in response, made a very happy speech, in which he recounted the history of the college for the past fifty years, and spoke hopefully of its future.

The Secretary of the Association then read letters from Senators HOWARD and MORGAN, General GARFIELD, member of Congress, and others.

The next regular toast given was:

"The Faculty of the College—Their learning and fidelity will maintain the historic reputation of our Alma Mater."

Responded to by Professor CARTER.

The fourth toast was:

"The Benefactors of the College—May their shadow never be less; may their substance ever increase."

This toast was to have been responded to by WILLIAM E. DODGE; but that gentleman was unavoidably absent, and sent a telegram full of good wishes to the College. The glee club then sang, "Old Williams is a Jolly Home."

The fifth toast was:

"The Sons of Williams—who served in defence of the national flag during the recent rebellion."

Colonel DWIGHT was called upon to respond to the toast, which he did in a speech full of happy allusions to the founder of the College, from whom he was a lineal descendant. He stated that thirty-two Alumni of the College had died in the service of the country during the war.

The sixth regular toast was:

"The Poet Laureate of our Alma Mater—The world honors his genius, but Williams claims him as her son."

This toast was responded to with great enthusiasm.

Mr. BRYANT, in a response of great fitness, said:

I thank the company for this expression of their good will. Yet there is but one part of the toast just given which I can without vanity take to myself—the words, I mean, expressive of the filial relation which I bear to Williams College. I am proud to acknowledge my obligations to her as my foster mother, although I came late to the breast, that is to say in my sophomore year, and was weaned early, namely, toward the end of that year. She has, however, been so kind as to reckon me among her family in her catalogues, and admit me to the honors bestowed upon those who have completed their course of study under her inspection. Mr. President: I rejoice at the growth, in the increase of dignity and usefulness and public respect which has been hers since the time when I was a student within her walls. Williams College is now in every respect an institution worthy of the beautiful region in which it is situated, and that is saying much. The world has not many places in which the aspect of external nature is more attractive. The grand mountains, the glorious valleys, the cities of the murmuring through smooth and fresh meadows, the glens, the waterfalls, the forests form combinations which have sometimes made me wonder why the annual commencements of Williams are not oftener attended by strangers, were it only for a look at the charming landscapes of the surrounding country. I have thought that those who sojourn in its learned shades must be sometimes haunted by the feeling expressed by Dr. ARNOLD, when, sitting in his study at Fox How, he said: "I am afraid to lift up my eyes from the page before me and look out, lest I be tempted to go out upon Fairfield." Fairfield, you know, is one of the mountains which overlook the beautiful region of the English lakes.

The remainder of the speech was an eloquent indorsement of the administration of affairs by President HOPKINS, who, as Mr. BRYANT said, was indeed the right man in the right place.

The next toast was:

"The Sons of Williams—who, on the Bench and at the Bar, have illustrated the institution."

Responded to by Judge BENEDICT.

The other toasts were "Our Brethren in the Medical Profession," "The Memory of EPHRAIM WILLIAMS, founder of the College," (when a sword, formerly belonging to the illustrious founder, was presented by Judge BENEDICT,) "The Ladies," "The Younger Alumni," &c. The remainder of the meeting was spent in convivial harmony.

Discovery of Tobacco Frauds.

On the 30th of January, Collector SHOOK, of the Thirty-second District, received information that there was a lot of plug tobacco in store No. 74 Water-street, this City, with a fraudulent label on the packages. Mr. SHOOK immediately caused the seizure of the goods, and on the following Monday, gave the case to his deputy, ISAAC HARVEY, for examination. In the course of the day, Mr. HARVEY ascertained that the tobacco came here by way of Baltimore, Md., in hogsheads, and was shipped as "tobacco stems." Each hogshead contained forty caddies of plug tobacco, surrounded by tobacco stems, for a blind. Mr. HARVEY further learned that five of these hogsheads had been shipped from this City to Boston on the previous Friday and Saturday; whereupon the agent of the line at Boston was telegraphed to to hold the property, and, at the same time, WM. H. MCCARTNEY, Esq., Collector of Internal Revenue at Boston, was written to to seize the same, which he did on the 2d of February. In the meantime, Mr. HARVEY kept up the investigation, and was rewarded by finding three hogsheads more of the same style of tobacco in a cotton store at No. 11 Broadway on the 4th of February, making in all about 7,000 pounds of plug tobacco. Still continuing his investigations, he became satisfied that the tobacco was manufactured in Richmond, Va., whereupon Mr. HARVEY asked of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that CHAS. BLACKIE be instructed to visit Richmond with a view of having the factory seized if found. Mr. BLACKIE arrived in Richmond about the 20th of February, and on the 23d of February caused the seizure of the tobacco factory of L. M. PAINTER, of Richmond, having become satisfied from information received before starting for Richmond that the tobacco in question came from that establishment.

The manufacturers of this tobacco, in order to mislead the Government officers and to shield their factory, put the factory number of JAS. G. DILL, a prominent manufacturer of Richmond, on the boxes, as section 62 of the act of July 20, 1868, requires that every wooden package containing tobacco shall have the manufacturer's or proprietor's name and number of the factory legibly marked upon it.

The matter will, of course, undergo proper legal examination for the purpose of fastening the fraud upon the proper parties.

Three Houses Burned.

About two o'clock yesterday morning a fire broke out in the three-story frame building in Fifty-ninth-street, near Eleventh-avenue, owned by JAMES NETTIS, and occupied by him as a rectifying distillery, and the building and contents were totally destroyed, causing a loss to NETT

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

Yesterday was a much more satisfactory day at the salesrooms than the preceding one. The morning was bright and clear, and although the attendance was no larger than on Tuesday, the proportion of bidders was greater, and the market generally a little firmer than any day since Monday. Yet it was hesitating and undecided. The speculators were evidently at fault, inclining toward a rising market, yet fearing to invest very extensively lest their ideas should prove incorrect, while the other class, who purchase for investment, were scarcely as enthusiastic as usual, and, though evidently expecting a decline, were unwilling to miss the opportunity to buy, lest they also should be mistaken, and the change, when it does take place, should be contrary to their desires.

The sales were consequently very irregular; some pieces of desirable property brought large prices; other pieces equally desirable were offered, and failing to bring anything near the amounts they were valued at by their owners, were either withdrawn or bid in. One very noticeable feature was that improved business property was most in demand. Last week unimproved lots were the only ones which brought large prices.

The oldest operators seem entirely lost. They "do not know what to make of it." They predict all sorts of things. One venerable gentleman, who has been familiar with all matters connected with New-York real estate for many years, and who is by many regarded as authority, says the day for extravagant prices has passed; that the change has already commenced, and that from this time there will be a decline. Another gentleman, equally old and experienced, and as highly esteemed, is positive that this is but a temporary lull, a sort of breathing spell; that next week will see an improvement, and that by Monday the demand will be as great and the market as firm as ever. There are many good reasons why his ideas may be regarded as correct. The increased demand for real estate was sudden and unexpected. With the proposition for a Grand Boulevard and the consequent improvement of all property in its vicinity, grew a demand for west-end lots on which to build elegant mansions. The number of lots originally offered were few, the would-be purchasers many. The prices consequently advanced with great rapidity, and in proportion as they went higher and higher, the desire to purchase increased. Shrewd men took advantage of this excitement, large plots of wild property, where the streets were not even cut through, were divided up into City lots and put into the market, until it finally became overcrowded. Purchasers, astonished at the great supply, became more cautious and less anxious to buy, until finally, as might be expected, a change came, and now the market is moderately quiet.

By far the largest crowd in the salesrooms yesterday gathered around the stand of Messrs. A. J. BLEECKER, SON & Co., who were selling a portion of the Lorillard estate, under the direction of PHILO T. RUGGLES, Esq., referee, and the prices brought by this property were higher than any other. One lot with buildings thereon, situate on the north side of Canal-street, twenty-three feet west of Mercer-street, 19.9x68.10, after a spirited contest, was knocked down to the owner of the corner property for $51,000, by far the best sale of the day. The four-story brick store No. 113 Pearl-street, near Hanover, 24.8¾x90.8¾ brought $45,000. The lot with one-story building, No. 143 Worth-street, near Centre, 22x92.10, brought $17,000. The perpetual lease—rent $100—of property on corner of Houston and Mercer streets, in rear of where St. Thomas' Church once stood, brought $4,000. The gross amount realized by this sale was $224,600—much better than was anticipated.

Messrs. E. H. LUDLOW & Co. had some desirable up-town property to sell, but the number of bidders was not great. One lot, with three-story, attic and basement brick house, No. 131 Clinton-place, near Sixth-avenue, brought $16,500. Other pieces, on Fifty-fifth-street, near Sixth-avenue, on One Hundred and Twentieth-street, near Third-avenue, and on Fifth-avenue, between One Hundred and Fourteenth and One Hundred and Fifteenth streets, brought very moderate prices. It is quite possible these last may be offered again when the market is more favorable.

The Bay Ridge property offered by Messrs. WYCKOFF & LITTLE, and the Brooklyn property offered by Messrs. JOHNSON & MILLER, attracted good audiences, composed principally of first-class mechanics and small merchants. The lots are desirable for small residences, and went off pretty rapidly at good, fair prices. Other similar property will be offered next week.

A small sale was made at Elizabeth, N. J., which is interesting, chiefly because it was once the residence of Lieutenant-General WINFIELD SCOTT. The mansion-house and lot northwest corner of Jersey-street and Madison-avenue, lot 115.2x153.8x81.3x150, was sold for $9,750; one lot west side of Madison-avenue, near Jersey-street, $1,000; one adjoining, $850, and one lot on Jefferson-avenue, north of Jersey-street, $1,125.

The sales to-day are very light. Messrs. MULLER, WILKINS & Co. have several pieces of improved property to offer. The majority of stands though will be vacant, and there will be no particular excitement at the salesrooms until Monday next, when several important sales will take place, among which one of the largest will be that of the Morris estate, by JAMES M. MILLER, whose advertisement will be found at the head of another column.

AFFAIRS AT ALBANY.

Report of the Legislative Investigating Committee.

Immense Sums of Money Used to Influence Legislation.

Where the Money was Obtained and to Whom it was Paid.

Allegations Against Members of the Legislature Unsustained by Evidence.

Important Change in the Bribery Law Recommended.

The Constitutional Amendment Made the Special Order for Tuesday—Report of the Senate Committee on Bribery and Corruption—The Tax Commissioners' Bill—The Case of Real.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Thursday, March 11, 1869.

There was a large accession to the Albany lobby this morning, including several prominent politicians from New-York—Comptroller CONNOLLY, PETER B. SWEENEY and Sheriff O'BRIEN among the number. The last named has brought us his bill, vetoed last year, for increasing the fees of his office.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

In pursuance of an agreement made with leading Democratic members of the Assembly last night, Mr. HUSTED, Chairman of the Committee on Federal Relations, to-day reported a resolution ratifying the Fifteenth Constitutional Amendment, and moved that it be made the special order for Tuesday next, which was agreed to nem. con. The Democrats will not resort to any filibustering schemes or parliamentary dodges to defeat or delay the ratification of the amendment. They only ask that they shall not be cut off, by the previous question, from speaking against it, and the majority have agreed to allow them that privilege.

THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

A large number of bills were progressed to-day and several unimportant ones advanced to a third reading. The bill incorporating a cab company in New-York was virtually killed by absurd amendments offered by New-York members, one of which provides that the fare shall not exceed twenty-five cents to any part of the City.

Judge CAMPBELL's general bill for bonding towns in aid of railroads was also loaded down with amendments enough to crush the life out of it.

THE ARCADE RAILROAD AGAIN.

Among the latest and probably the last railroad bill for New-York City is the famous "Arcade" Road under Broadway, which reappeared in the Senate to-day. This road met with remarkable success at the last session of the Legislature, having passed the Assembly unanimously and only failing in the Senate by two votes. It is a magnificent scheme on paper, and strikes people at first glance more favorably than any other plan for a steam railroad in New-York, but doubts are expressed whether its cost will not render it impracticable.

THE NEW-YORK TAX COMMISSIONERS.

The bill authorizing the Comptroller to appoint four Commissioners of Taxes for New-York City, to hold office five years, was up in Senate Committee of the Whole to-day. During the discussion Mr. CREAMER, the author of the bill, said that it was not a Democratic measure, and that the appointments would not be, and ought not in his opinion to be, made on party grounds. Being asked whether he said this by authority, he replied that when the same bill was before the Legislature last year, the Comptroller told him that if the appointments were given to him he should disregard politics in making the selections, and follow the course of his predecessor in appointing the Commissioners of Charities and Correction. The bill was progressed.

THE CASE OF REAL—NO PARDON APPLIED FOR.

It has been stated in several newspapers that a great pressure had been brought to bear upon Governor HOFFMAN to induce him to pardon REAL, the murderer of Policeman SMEDICK, but that the Governor had resolutely refused. I have the best authority for saying, that up to 1 P. M. to-day, no human being has ever spoken to the Governor upon the subject, nor have any applications for the pardon of REAL been made to the Governor by letter, petition or otherwise. The only documents relating to REAL thus far received, are a certified copy of the evidence given on the trial, which was sent to the Governor by the Judge who tried the prisoner, and which the Governor has read. A Republican Caucus.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Thursday, March 11.

A caucus of Republican members of the Assembly was held this evening to consult upon certain measures now pending before the Legislature. There was a full attendance. The ratification of the Constitutional amendment was first considered, and it was agreed to give it a unanimous and hearty support. The bill now pending in the Senate, to give the appointment of Tax Commissioners in New-York to the Comptroller, was then discussed and laid over for future consideration. The prevailing sentiment was against the bill. The third and last subject considered was Mr. CHASE's bill, continuing in force, with certain modifications, the present canal contract system. This, too, was laid over without definite action. The utmost harmony prevailed.

The Senate held an evening session, and continued the discussion on STANFORD's bill to repeal the canal contract system. The bill was progressed, and will doubtless pass the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE CORRUPTION.

Senator Hale's Report on the Alleged Corruption in Regard to Railroad Legislation.

To the Senate:

The select Committee appointed pursuant to the resolution passed April 10, 1868, to inquire and ascertain "whether any party or parties interested in supporting or opposing any measures relating to railway companies have, either in person or by agent, directly or indirectly, paid or offered to pay any member or members of the Senate during that session any money or other valuable thing, to influence his or their vote or action in Senate or committee;" and the further resolution passed May 1, 1868, by which said Committee was authorized to sit during the recess and to report to the next regular session of the Senate, respectfully report:

That your Committee entered immediately upon the duties assigned to them, and have been engaged in the investigation on which they entered at various times during the session of 1868, the recess of the Legislature and the present session.

Your Committee's attention has been called principally to the great contest of last session between the friends and opponents of what was commonly known as the "Erie bill," which resulted in the passage of the act entitled "an act in relation to the Erie, New-York Central, Hudson River and Harlem Railway Companies," passed April 21, 1868.

Your Committee first called before them and examined some of those who had been by rumor most widely designated as lobbyists or persons in attendance on the Legislature, engaged on either side of this controversy. Messrs. JOHN B. DUTCHER and ABRAHAM VAN VECHTEN, who were known as opponents of the bill, and Messrs. HUGH J. HASTINGS, JAY GOULD, JULIAN WILLIAMS and DYER D. S. BROWN, who were among the advocates of the measure, also the Treasurers of the Hudson River and Harlem Railroads, corporations supposed to be interested in opposing the bill.

These persons all denied any knowledge or information other than that derived from common rumor of the case, or offer of any money or valuable thing, or any promise or offer of moneys for the purposes indicated in the resolution.

The attention of your committee was next called to an article in the New-York Tribune, charging that one Senator had taken money on both sides, and that over $100,000 had been paid to influence corruptly the action of other Senators in the premises. They summoned before them the writer of this article, Hon. HORACE GREELEY, to ascertain the evidence upon which it was written. The name of Hon. THOMAS C. FIELDS was given by Mr. GREELEY as that of his informant. Your Committee accordingly examined him, and also Senator MATTOON and Mr. ARABEL W. COLE, whose names were mentioned by Mr. GREELEY.

Toward the close of the session a Senator, who received information that led him to believe that a lobbyist had attempted to get money from the friends of the "Erie Bill" on the pretence that he could thereby secure his vote, called the attention of your Committee to such information, in consequence of which subpœnas were issued, and after some difficulty the attendance of Messrs. JOHN VAN VALKENBURG and LEWIS F. PAYNE was procured. The facts, as testified to by these, are stated in a subsequent part of this report.

Other witnesses were then called, as the facts developed and statements made to your Committee seemed to require. The evidence reported having been taken at various times, as the presence of witnesses could be obtained, is without arrangement; much of it, too, is simply of a negative character.

Your Committee therefore think it necessary in this report to state some of the material facts proved, and the bearing they have upon the subject matter of the investigation.

The first inquiry naturally suggested was, whether money was actually expended by Railway Companies with the intent that it should be used for unlawful purposes.

The Treasurers of the Hudson River and Harlem Railroads both testify that no money was drawn from the treasuries of their roads for the purpose referred to. Mr. DREW, the Treasurer of the Erie Railway Company, until July, 1868, also swears that he had no knowledge of any money being paid out of the treasury of that Company for the purpose of procuring legislation, but he testified that Mr. ELDRIDGE, the President of the road, drew $500,000 out of the treasury before the session of the Legislature ostensibly for the purposes of litigation, which was charged on the books of the Company to Mr. ELDRIDGE individually, and which had not been accounted for when he retired from the office of Treasurer in July last; and that no money other than that had then been drawn out of the treasury to pay the expenses of the Company at all to any extent. It from the testimony that large amounts of money were actually paid for various purposes. Mr. GOULD paid $5,000 to LEWIS F. PAYNE, and $2,000 to some person, (he thinks his name was WILLIAM KING,) for Mr. D. D. S. BROWN, of Rochester, and something more than $25,000, and he thinks less than $50,000, but including payments by direct counsel and agents. Mr. THOMPSON paid $5,000 to PAYNE and upward of $60,000 to LUTHER CALDWELL, which was refunded to him by the Erie Railway Company. It is clear, therefore, that large sums of money did come from the treasury of the Erie Railway Company, which were expended for some purpose in Albany for which no vouchers seem to have been filed in the office of the Company. The objects of the expenditure cannot be learned from the books of the Company. The testimony of Mr. DREW shows where these funds may have come from. Whether the creation of a large fund in Albany, intrusted to Mr. ELDRIDGE in this instance, the expenditure of which is left entirely to the discretion of a single individual, and for which no vouchers or accounts are required, is usual with railroad companies, your Committee are not informed. It is a question of more immediate interest to stockholders of the companies. Mr. DREW, being a citizen of and in another State, his attendance before your Committee could not be compelled. He was invited by letter to appear and testify, but the invitation was not responded to.

The testimony leaves no doubt in the minds of your Committee that large sums of money were in fact furnished with the intent that they should be used for purposes of influencing legislation unlawfully. In the only cases in which your Committee have been able to obtain any direct evidence, the moneys so furnished were not in fact used for the purpose intended, but went to enrich members of the lobby.

The case of LEWIS F. PAYNE furnishes a remarkable example of credulity on the part of the parties expending money, and of impudence and duplicity on the part of the person receiving it. PAYNE was a barbor-master in New-York, and as such receiving, as he testifies, some $350 per month. He had never been in the employ of a railroad company; had no profession, nor any extensive general acquaintance or influence. Still he was paid the sum of $10,000, as he pretends, for a few days' services in Albany in advocating the "Erie bill." Mr. THOMPSON paid him $5,000 in New-York, and Mr. GOULD, though he "did not take much stock" in him, as he says, (not having heard of THOMPSON's payment,) gave him $5,000 here to "smooth him over!" It will not be credited that these amounts were paid him simply for services. They were obtained by him, as no one can doubt from reading the evidence, on the pretence that with such a sum he could secure a Senator's vote. The testimony of VAN VALKENBURGH with that of Mr. THOMPSON and Senator PALMER is conclusive upon this point, and it was only on ascertaining that the Senator referred to was opposed to the bill, and that his character for integrity and honor was so high as to render any effort at producing a change in his views or action by pecuniary inducements not only useless but absurd, that the attempt was made to get back the money from PAYNE, which gave rise to the angry controversy sworn to by VAN VALKENBURGH, which led to bringing the matter to the knowledge of the Senator, whose surprise and indignation at the discovery of so base an attempt to make merchandise of his good name, caused him to give your Committee the information which enabled them to discover the facts.

The case of LUTHER CALDWELL is still more extraordinary. Mr. CALDWELL's name was first mentioned in the testimony taken by your Committee by Mr. GREELEY, who testified that Mr. A. W. COLE had stated that $100,000 was placed in the hands of LUTHER CALDWELL and RUSSELL F. HICKS to influence legislation. Mr. COLE was then called, and while he did not profess to have any actual knowledge on the subject, gave information which led your Committee to call Senator NICKS as a witness. He testified that in a conversation with CALDWELL, in explanation of the fact that he had suddenly left Albany pending the "Erie contest," Mr. CALDWELL had told him (Senator NICKS) that "the party known as the Vanderbilt party, or the opposition to the bill, had made a proposition to him to have him leave Albany, and that he (Senator NICKS) Mr. GOULD of the proposition they had made him, and that he had told Mr. GOULD that he was going away; that they (the Vanderbilt party) proposed to give him $70,000 if he would leave Albany; that they did so, and he went away; that he had before received from the "Erie side" a very liberal compensation for his services; that they wanted him to take his pay in Central Railroad stock, but that he refused this and demanded the money, which was paid to him "in all kinds of bills." That he did not say by whom this money was paid, but referred to the "Vanderbilt party" as "they," and that somewhere in that connection the name of JOHN B. DUTCHER was mentioned.

On General DIVEN's examination he was asked if he had any knowledge of money being placed in the hands of LUTHER CALDWELL by the Erie Railway Company. His answer was "No." He was then asked if he had any information on that subject derived from any source or agent of the Company. He replied that he had been told by HENRY THOMPSON, a director of the Company, that CALDWELL had received a large sum of money, something like $100,000, just before—a day or so before—the vote was taken, and that he had kept it and left the City.

Mr. CALDWELL himself, after several unsuccessful efforts to procure his attendance, appeared before your Committee on the day preceding the commencement of the present session of the Senate. In reply to a question whether he received any money from any officer of the Erie Railway Company, to be used in securing the passage of the bill, he answered in the negative. A question whether he received money from such source for any purpose, he declined to answer "till he could turn it over in his mind." He also declined to answer "till he had time for reflection," the questions whether he knew of moneys being paid by any person interested for or against the bill to any one for the purpose of securing the vote of any Senator, and whether he received money from any party interested in opposing the bill. He said he could decide whether he would answer these questions by the next morning, and the Committee adjourned to the next morning to give him the desired opportunity for reflection. Your Committee were in attendance the next day at the appointed hour and place, but Mr. CALDWELL did not appear, nor has he since been before them, and on inquiry your Committee have been informed that he is spending the season in some of the Southern States. Mr. RUSSELL F. HICKS, whose name appears in the testimony in connection with Mr. CALDWELL's, was subpœnaed, but did not attend, alleging ill health as an excuse.

Mr. HENRY THOMPSON has since testified that he paid CALDWELL at one time $10,000, and afterward upwards of $60,000, which was refunded to him by the Erie Railway Company, and which was for no specific purpose, unless to influence public opinion through the Press. Mr. E. M. MADDEN swears that he was told by Mr. GOULD that CALDWELL had been to him to get money, as he pretended, for a Senator and a member of Assembly, which he (GOULD) had peremptorily refused. Mr. MADDEN also testifies that CALDWELL told him, just before he left Albany, that he had seen Ex-Senator DUTCHER on the Harlem Railroad the day before.

By Senator NICKS' testimony, it will be seen that Mr. CALDWELL claimed that the money he received from the "Erie party" was for his "services," and that received from the "Vanderbilt party" was for "leaving Albany."

It will hardly be believed by the most credulous that so large an amount—more than men even of great learning and distinguished ability ordinarily acquire by a lifetime of industry—was paid by either of these "parties," simply for a few days' "services," or the mere absence from Albany of Mr. LUTHER CALDWELL.

If these large amounts were paid to Mr. CALDWELL for any lawful purpose, and such purpose was accomplished, or the money used in good faith, as was intended, there would probably be no hesitation on the part of those having knowledge in furnishing proof of the facts. If, as would seem from the evidence, these large amounts of money were diverted from the purpose for which they were paid, and appropriated by the agent selected to his own use, the fact that no proceedings, civil or criminal, appear to have been instituted against the agent, raises a strong presumption that it was paid for some unlawful purpose. In that case, those who alone would be likely to complain of the fraudulent diversion might well fear that a criminal prosecution would develop too much and show too many criminals, while the legal maxim, in pari delicto, &c., would prove a serious obstacle to success in a civil action.

Your Committee think there can be no doubt that so large sums must have been intended chiefly for unlawful and corrupt purposes—and taking this in connection with the evidence of Mr. DREW, and the evidence of the existence of &c., many "rumors" about the unlawful use of money, the conviction is forced upon the minds of your Committee, as they think it must be upon those of all who peruse this testimony, that some persons interested both for and against the bill were furnishing money from some source, with the intent and for the purpose of corruptly and unlawfully influencing legislation.

We are next led to the inquiry whether such purpose was actually carried out by the payment of money to and its acceptance by any members of the Senate.

This inquiry, carried on by members of the body whose reputation is affected by the charge, is, of course, one of great delicacy and difficulty. Your Committee could not assume, without any charge being made against any Senator, that any one had been guilty. They therefore adopted the course of examining first, the editors of various newspapers in which charges more or less specific had been made, and then other persons who were referred to in the testimony or otherwise, as having knowledge or information on the subject.

The first editor called was Mr. GREELEY. He had in an article in the New-York Tribune used this language: "Can Senator FOLGER really mean to scout investigation as useless? Does he not know that quite a number of his fellow Senators have sold their votes in the Drew-Vanderbilt quarrel—some of them more than once? Can he not lay his hand at once on the Senator who is currently reported to have sold his vote and influence first to one side for $15,000, then to the other for $20,000, insisting that he must have $1,000 extra for his son? Is he not morally certain that more than $100,000 has been paid to influence corruptly the action of Senators in the premises."

Mr. GREELEY was asked to what Senator he alluded as having sold his vote and influence, first for $15,000 and then for $20,000, and replied, "Senator MATTOON," and gave Hon. THOMAS C. FIELDS as his authority for the charge against him. He could state no fact in reference to any other Senator. After detailing his conversation with Mr. FIELDS, Mr. GREELEY was asked if he had any other information in regard to Mr. MATTOON, to which he replied, "I do not know that I have especially; I have the information which you have here, that he agreed with the report on one side and then voted on the other side."

Mr. FIELDS was then called. He gave his version of his conversation with Mr. GREELEY—said that he knew no facts relating to the subject of inquiry; that he told Mr. GREELEY that what he stated was mere rumor; and that he did not mention Mr. MATTOON's name or speak of any fact as within his own knowledge.

The Lansingburg Gazette contained an editorial article charging that Senator MATTOON had received $20,000 from J. GOULD to sign a report in his favor, and had turned squarely around and made a different report." Your Committee called before them Mr. KIRKPATRICK, the editor of this paper, who testified that he knew nothing of the transaction and did not write the article, but that it was written by one F. B. HUBBELL, then the clerk of a Committee in Assembly. Mr. HUBBELL was afterward called and examined, and admitted that he wrote the article, but testified that he had no knowledge on the subject and no information except what was derived from some person who said he had got his information from a letter published in the New-York Tribune.

Mr. MATTOON presented himself and examined at length, and testified that he had never, directly or indirectly, received or been offered or promised any money or other valuable thing to affect his vote or action in the premises.

Your Committee, also, in view of the charges made against Mr. MATTOON, examined many witnesses with reference to the interview of that Senator with the parties interested in advocating or opposing the Erie bill. It appears that Senator MATTOON made several visits to different directors of the Erie Railway Company after his appointment upon the Investigating Committee of which Senator PIERCE was Chairman.

The attention of Mr. GOULD, General GIVEN, Mr. FISK, Mr. DREW and others was called to these interviews, and all the witnesses so examined deny any knowledge of any payment, or any offer or promise of any payment to him for any purpose. Mr. DREW testifies that in an interview with him before the report of Senator PIERCE's Committee was made, Mr. MATTOON "intimated as if he would take money if it was offered to him." When asked to give the language of Senator MATTOON upon which he based this inference, he stated that "Mr. MATTOON said we cannot go there and live upon what we get, and all that kind of talk. The inference I drew was that he would take money if it was offered to him." Mr. DREW also said that he had no ground for supposing Mr. MATTOON wanted money other than from the conversation that he had testified to.

The testimony of Mr. DREW was read by the stenographer to Mr. MATTOON, who gave his version of his conversation with DREW, and denied most positively that he had in any way intimated that he would receive anything for himself or any other person for his action in the premises.

A brief statement, in chronological order of Mr. MATTOON's connection with the investigation may throw some light upon the question:

On the 18th day of March, 1868, Senator PIERCE introduced a preamble and resolution reciting that grave charges had been made in reference to the management of the Erie Railway Company; that the general management of the Company was conducted by persons who systematically made use of their positions to depreciate and destroy the value of the stock of the Company, and that the directors had issued a larger amount of stock than was allowed by law, and providing for the appointment of a committee of three Senators to investigate such charges. This preamble and resolution were adopted. On the following day Mr. MATTOON moved that the Committee be five instead of three Senators; it was so ordered, and Senators PIERCE, CHAPMAN, HUMPHREY, MATTOON and BRADLEY were appointed such Committee.

On the 10th day of March this Committee thus appointed commenced its investigations in the City of New-York.

On that day or the day before, General DIVEN testifies that Senator MATTOON called at the office of the Erie Railway in New-York and saw several directors, and among other things stated "what he regarded as the object and purpose of moving for the Committee, and what his motive was in moving for the increase of the Committee and to procure himself to be placed upon it; that the object of moving for the Committee was mercenary, and that he (Senator MATTOON) intended no such use should be made of the examination, and he had procured his son to be made Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms; that he was to serve without cost to the State; that he didn't mean the examination should cost the State anything, and he meant to see that there was fair play."

Pending this investigation, Senator MATTOON had several interviews with different directors of the Erie Railway Company, some in New-York and some in Jersey City. At one interview Mr. GOULD testifies he told him that the majority of the Committee had found the thing was right, and urged that "some representative of the road" should go to Albany, "in justice to the Committee."

On Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, (March 29, 30 and 31,) Senators CHAPMAN, HUMPHREY and MATTOON were in consultation in preparing a report to some extent frvorable to what was understood to be the Erie or Drew side of the question.

Tuesday morning, March 31, Senator CHAPMAN read a draft of a proposed report to Senators HUMPHREY and MATTOON, which he understood them both to approve, and to which Senator MATTOON made no objection. The same day all the members of the Committee met.

Senators PIERCE and BRADLEY signed their report; Senators CHAPMAN and HUMPHREY signed theirs. Senator MATTOON did not sign either, but expressed the opinion that both were "pretty strong," and he wanted to think of it.

Wednesday, April 1, Senator MATTOON joined with Senators PIERCE and BRADLEY in making a report, sustaining to the fullest extent the charges referred to in the original resolution, characterizing the conduct of Mr. DREW as "disgraceful"—expressing the belief that ELDRIDGE, FISK and GOULD "were concerned, and probably interested, with DREW in these corrupt proceedings," charging that these acts were "without authority of law," and that the directors named had taken "advantage of their position and influence for purposes of private gain and emolument," and recommending additional legislation to enforce increased penalties for such offences. The same day, Senators CHAPMAN and HUMPHREY presented the report read the preceding day by Senator CHAPMAN, as above stated, signed by themselves alone, as a minority report. Mr. GOULD testifies that he was perfectly astounded when he heard that Senator MATTOON had signed this report.

On the 18th day of April, 1868, the "Act in relation to the Erie, New-York Central, Hudson River, and Harlem Railway Companies" was announced for its third reading, and passed the Senate by seventeen affirmative votes, one of which was given by Senator MATTOON.

In the supply bill for 1868, (Session Laws, p. 1,586,) we find the item, "For J. H. MATTOON, for services and expenses as Clerk and Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms of the Committee of the Senate appointed to investigate the affairs of the Erie Railway Company, $100."

The course of Senator MATTOON, while upon an investigating committee, in repeatedly paying private visits to the persons whose conduct was the subject of investigation, for the purpose of conferring with them as to matters before the Committee, cannot be justified and has not been excused. But the evidence taken before your Committee upon a full examination of all persons who were known to have made charges against him, and all who had been named as parties with whom he had had improper transactions, does not prove the charge that he was paid "any money or other valuable thing to influence his vote or action in Senate or Committee."

No evidence has been given nor any charge made affecting any other Senator, except that Mr. DREW also testified to a conversation with Senator GRAHAM, from which he "drew an inference" that the Senator wanted money or a promise of money. Mr. GRAHAM himself denies the use of the language attributed to him by Mr. DREW, and wholly denies the imputation of seeking or asking any reward.

It appears that Mr. DREW had before had personal difficulty with both Senator GRAHAM and Senator MATTOON—a long litigation with the latter.

The testimony taken before your Committee shows very clearly the reckless manner in which charges attributing crimes to public men and involving ruin and disgrace to those charged are made by persons connected with the public Press.

The New-York Tribune in a conspicuous editorial, charged (interrogatively but no less clearly than if the allegation had been direct) that one of the oldest Senators in this body knew "that quite a number of his fellow Senators had sold their votes in the Drew-Vanderbilt quarrel—some of them more than once."

Upon examining Mr. GREELEY, who wrote the article, it appeared that he had no information even as to more than one Senator, and that was derived from a man who stated it merely as a rumor, of the truth of which he had no knowledge. The writer for the Lansingburg paper named a Senator as having been guilty of the crime of bribery upon no ground other than a statement of what somebody had told him he had read in the New-York Tribune, not even taking the trouble to read the article referred to as authority.

The case of Mr. JOHN F. MINER, a correspondent of the New-York Independent, Rochester Democrat, Brooklyn Union and New-York Citizen, shows still more strikingly the utter recklessness of truth with which such charges are sometimes made. This gentleman, then an attaché of the Senate, holding an office by the favor of the Lieutenant-Governor, in which he performed no substantial service, except to draw his salary, after adjournment of the Legislature wrote an elaborate article for the Independent, in which, among other things, he said that the Legislature of 1868 was the "worst assemblage of official thieves that ever disgraced the capital of the Empire State." While admitting that there were "honest and pure men in the Senate who had the good of the people at heart," he said in this article that they "were in a powerless minority." "It (the Legislature of 1868) exceeded all its predecessors in corruption." "Its private venality was only equaled by its eagerness for public plunder."

Your Committee having their attention called to this article, over the initials of a person whose connection with the Legislature was so intimate, not only from his official relations to the Senate, but from the fact of his having been the Albany correspondent of several newspapers, also connected to some extent with the lobby, summoned him before them to ascertain the basis of his sweeping and deliberate charges. In long examination, in which he was interrogated fully as to his knowledge, he was unable to state a fact within his personal knowledge to sustain his allegations, or to give your Committee the name of any person from whom he had received information of any such facts, or in any way to aid your Committee in their investigations. Indeed, this witness stated that when he heard rumors of corruption he "purposely investigated no further." He "did not try to trace these rumors to facts." With such avidity did this writer for a professedly religious newspaper seize hold of scandalous rumors, utterly regardless of their truth or falsehood, as the basis of a "sensation article" written for pay!

While your Committee recognize fully the right and duty of the Press to criticise and comment upon the conduct of men in public life, they are satisfied that such indiscriminate attacks upon a legislative body, based upon idle rumors, and written by men who take pains not to ascertain the truth or falsehood of what they write, are not only unjust, scandalous, and in every way reprehensible, but tend directly to encourage and increase the evil which they profess to desire to correct. Public accusers who purposely abstain from such investigation as will enable them to know the facts, by making indiscriminate and general charges, and in covering guilt where it really exists, are diverting attention from those who deserve censure and punishment.

The result of the labors of your Committee may be summarily stated thus:

1. Large sums of money were expended for corrupt purposes by parties interested in legislation concerning railways during the session of 1868.

2. Lobbyists were thus enriched, and in some cases received money on the false pretence that the votes of Senators were to be thereby influenced.

3. There is no proof of actual bribery of any Senator.

4. The newspaper charges made in the instances that were brought to the notice of your Committee were founded upon rumor alone, and have been in no case sustained by the evidence of the writers or other proof.

Your Committee deem it their duty, however, to express the opinion that, under the law as it now exists, it is almost impossible to prove the crime of bribery where it has been committed. Both the parties to the transaction, who alone can ordinarily have knowledge of the commission of the crime, are now liable to the same punishment. True the testimony given by one on the trial of another cannot be used against the person testifying; but the witness well knows that such testimony necessarily gives the clue to evidence by which he himself can be convicted and punished. The result is either a refusal to testify, or remarkable forgetfulness or something worse.

Your Committee therefore recommend a change in the law, by which the giver of a bribe, which is accepted, shall be exempt from prosecution. They recommend this not from any disposition to palliate the guilt of the party giving bribes, but because public policy requires that the means of obtaining proof should be facilitated, and this can be done only by exempting from punishment one of the guilty parties. The guilt of the party who, by accepting a bribe, betrays a public trust and violates his official oath is (if there can be any degrees in guilt of this kind) greater than that of him who gives it. At all events, your Committee submit that the Legislature owes it to its own reputation and dignity to adopt such measures as are best adapted to remove every obstacle that now exists to a full and thorough investigation as to the conduct of any of its members.

This change in the existing law, after much discussion in the recent Constitutional Convention, was inserted as a provision in the proposed new Constitution, and has frequently been urged upon the Legislature. To refuse to adopt it would subject the Legislature, with some degree of plausibility, if not justice, to the charge of unwillingness to expose itself to the risk of inviting evidence as to the truth or falsehood of the charges so often made against its purity and honor.

For the protection of the innocent that may be unjustly accused, from motives of malignity or revenge, it is recommended that upon trials for this crime, the party charged be allowed to testify in his own behalf.

Your Committee are also of the opinion that some legislation is necessary to prevent the despoil of the treasury of money from members of the lobby for purposes of corruption, and to prevent the use of the money of corporations by their directors, officers or agents with intent to violate the laws against bribery. And, with that view, they recommend the adoption, with such modification and amendment as may seem proper, of the law for "the more effectual suppression and punishment of bribery," heretofore introduced by their Chairman, and now on the files of the Senate.

It is perhaps proper to state that Senator EDWARDS, who was originally upon the Committee, was, at the close of the last session, excused from serving upon it further, and that Senator NICHOLS was then appointed in his place.

M. HALE.
FRANCIS S. THAYER, } Committee.
ASHER P. NICHOLS.

All which is respectfully submitted.
